BRITISH AND METRIC WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

BRITISH

MEASURES OF LENGTH

12 inches = 1 foot.
3 feet = 1 yard = 36 inches.
5½ yards = 1 pole = 16½ feet = 198 inches.
40 poles = 1 furlong = 220 yards = 660 feet.
8 furlongs = 1 mile = 1,760 yards = 5,280 feet.
3 miles = 1 league = 5,280 yards = 15,840 feet.

Nautical and Geographical Measure

6 feet = 1 fathom.
100 fathoms = 1 cable.
2,027·3 yards = 1·152 miles = 1 nautical (or geographical mile, or knot).
3 nautical miles = 1 nautical league = 3·456 ordinary miles.
The Knot is a measure of speed, see DICTIONARY.

Surveying Measure

1 link = 7·92 inches.
100 links = 1 chain = 66 feet = 22 yards.
80 chains = 1 mile = 5,280 feet.

MEASURES OF AREA

144 square inches = 1 square foot.
9 square feet = 1 square yard = 1,296 square inches.
30¼ square yards = 1 square pole (Note: 30¼ = 5½ × 5½).
40 square poles = 1 rood = 1,210 square yards.
4 roods = 1 acre = 4,840 square yards.
16 square poles = 1 square chain = 484 square yards (= 22 × 22).
10 square chains = 1 acre = (22 × 220 yards).
640 acres = 1 square mile.

MEASURES OF CAPACITY

1,728 cubic inches = 1 cubic foot.
27 cubic feet = 1 cubic yard.
40 cubic feet = 1 shipping ton.

Liquid and Dry Measure

4 gills = 1 pint (20 avoirdupois oz. of water).
2 pints = 1 quart.
2 quarts = 1 pottle.
4 quarts = 1 gallon (10 avoirdupois lb. of water).
2 gallons = 1 peck.
4 pecks = 1 bushel = 8 gallons.
Bushel of Barley, 47 lb.; beans, 63 lb. oats, 40 lb.; peas, 64 lb.; rye, 53 lb. wheat, 60 lb.
8 bushels = 1 quarter.
5 quarters = 1 wey or load.
2 weys = 1 last.
9 gallons = 1 firkin.
2 firkins = 1 kilderkin.
4 firkins = 1 barrel = 36 gallons.
54 gallons = 1 hogshead ale.
63 gallons = 1 hogshead wine.
84 gallons = 1 puncheon.
126 gallons = 1 pipe or butt.
2 pipes = 1 tun.

Apothecaries' Fluid Measure

60 minims = 1 drachm = ·216 cubic inches.
8 drachms = 1 ounce = 437½ grains (1 ounce avoirdupois of water).

MEASURES OF WEIGHT

Avoirdupois Weight

16 drams = 1 ounce = 437½ grains.
16 ounces = 1 pound = 7,000 grains.
14 pounds = 1 stone.
2 stones = 1 quarter = 28 pounds.
4 quarters = 1 hundredweight (cwt.) = 112 pounds.
20 cwts. = 1 ton = 2,240 pounds.

Troy Weight

24 grains = 1 pennyweight (dwt.).
20 dwts. = 1 ounce = 480 grains.
12 ounces = 1 pound = 5,760 grains.

Apothecaries' Weight

20 grains = 1 scruple (written ℈).
3 scruples = 1 drachm (written ʒ).
8 drachms = 1 ounce = 480 grains (written ℥)
12 ounces = 1 pound = 5,760 grains.

METRIC

Measures of Length

10 millimetres = 1 centimetre = ·3937 inches.
10 centimetres = 1 decimetre.
10 decimetres = 1 metre = 39·370113 inches.
10 metres = 1 decametre.
100 metres = 10 decametres = 1 hectometre = 109·36 yards.
1,000 metres = 10 hectometres = 1 kilometre = 62138 mile.
10,000 metres = 10 kilometres = 1 myriametre = 6·2138 miles.

Measures of Capacity

1,000 cubic centimetres (1 cubic decimetre) = 1 litre = 61·024 cubic inches.
The tenth, hundredth, and thousandth of a litre are called decilitre, centilitre, and millilitre respectively, while ten, a hundred, and a thousand are deca-, hecto-, and kilo-litres respectively.

Measures of Weight

The weight of 1 cubic centimetre of distilled water at 4° Centigrade (39·2° F.) is 1 gramme. As with the other units, the tenth, hundredth, and thousandth are the deci-, centi-, and milli-gramme respectively, while ten, a hundred, and a thousand are called deca-, hecto-, and kilo-gramme respectively.

1 gramme = 15·43235 grains.
1 kilogramme = 2·20462 lb. avoirdupois.

Measures of Area

1 square metre = 10·7644 square feet.
100 square metres = 1 square decametre = 1 are.
10,000 square metres = 1 square hectometre = 1 hectare = 11,960·46 square yards = 2·471 acres.
100 hectares = 247·1169 acres.

1. THE SOLAR SYSTEM

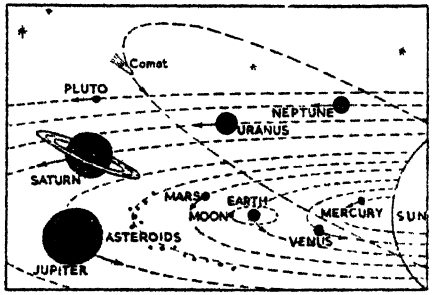
The Solar System consists of the Sun and its attendant family of planets and comets. The Sun itself is a yellow star below the average in size; it is one of the thousand million stars of the Galaxy which, seen edge-wise, forms the 'Milky Way.' The distance of the Solar System from the nearest star is 25 million million miles.

Origin of the Solar System

The theory that the matter composing the planets was drawn out of the Sun by the attraction of a passing star is no longer held. It seems more likely that it was gathered by the Sun during its passage through a dense cloud of cosmic dust. However acquired, this matter condensed to form the planets about 3,000 million years ago.

The planet nearest the Sun is Mercury, a body about four times the mass of the Moon. Mercury always turns the same face towards the Sun, with the result that one side has a temperature near the melting-point of zinc while the other remains permanently frozen. Mercury has no appreciable atmosphere.

Venus, the 'evening star,' comes next in order from the Sun, and is a little smaller than the Earth. The period of rotation of Venus is unobservable because its surface is never seen. It is enshrouded in an atmosphere of carbon dioxide laden with immense clouds, possibly of dust; neither water-vapour nor oxygen has been detected. Apart from the Sun and Moon, Venus is the brightest object in the sky.



Next after Venus comes the Earth with its attendant Moon, and beyond the Earth's orbit lies that of Mars.

Evidence of Life

Mars is a reddish planet of a little more than half the Earth's diameter. It has a thin atmosphere in which no oxygen has been detected, but small clouds are often observed.

The poles exhibit white caps which diminish during their respective summers and are believed to consist of thin layers of hoar-frost.

The surface of Mars is clearly visible, its general pink colour being broken by areas of a greenish tint which show seasonal variations. It is now generally accepted that these represent a hardy type of vegetation, possibly comparable with our lichens. The famous 'canals' on Mars do not exist, but there is certainly some feature at the limit of visibility which occasionally gives the illusion of 'canals.'

The principal members of the Solar System in order of size but not in proportion.

Beyond Mars come the Minor Planets or Asteroids. These are small bodies, some only a few hundred yards across. About two thousand are known, and they may be the fragments of a large planet broken up by the gravitational attraction of Jupiter.

The Giant Planets

Jupiter is larger than all the other planets put together. It probably has a rocky core encased in ice several thousand miles thick, and is surrounded by a dense atmosphere of methane and ammonia. The telescope shows only the belts of clouds which encircle the planet, though a standing problem is provided by the 'Great Red Spot,' which waxes and wanes but seems to be a permanent feature. The surface temperature of Jupiter is −200° F.

Saturn, another giant planet, is similar in structure, though its case of ice is probably even thicker, because the planet as a whole is lighter than water. The well-known 'rings' which encircle Saturn are believed to consist of small solid fragments like sand-grains, and to represent the debris of a satellite which approached sufficiently close to the planet to be broken up by gravitational stresses. Saturn's atmosphere consists largely of methane, and its surface is even colder than that of Jupiter.

Uranus and Neptune are smaller planets of essentially the same type. They are so remote from the Sun that they receive very little light or heat. Pluto is so small and distant that little is known about it. From Pluto the Sun itself can appear as little more than an extra bright star.

Comets and Meteors

Comets consist of collections of rocky or metallic fragments of all sizes pursuing extremely elliptical orbits round the Sun. Their origin is unknown. The pressure of the Sun's light causes the finer particles to stream away from the comet as a tail, which may be millions of miles long. The Earth occasionally passes through a comet's tail, but suffers no ill effects.

Particles left scattered round the orbits of comets sometimes fall to the Earth as meteorites. Usually, such particles burn right away by friction with the Earth's atmosphere, when they are called meteors or "shooting-stars."

2. WORLD FACTS AND FIGURES

The total surface area of the Earth has been estimated to be 196,836,000 sq. miles. Of this, nearly 56,000,000 sq. miles are land areas and 141,000,000 sq. miles, water. The Earth's diameter at the Equator is 7,926.5 miles; its circumference at the Equator is 24,901.8 miles.

Longitude and Latitude

This circumference is divided into 360 degrees of longitude, each of which measures at the Equator 69.17 English miles (60 geographical miles). The 'prime' or first meridian (0°) passes through Greenwich (London) and the degrees are numbered off East and West of this meridian to the 180° in the Antipodes.

Parallels of latitude are marked off North and South from the Equator (0°) to 90° at each Pole. These lines of longitude and latitude enable the exact position of any point on the surface of the Earth to be given.

The Continents

The continents of the world are Europe, Asia, Africa, North America, South America and Australia. To these is often added Antarctica, sometimes called 'the seventh continent.' Oceania is the island-studded ocean area east of Australia and north of New Zealand.

Europe accounts for about one-fourteenth of the land surface of the world. From Cape

St Vincent in the west to the Urals in the east, it measures some 3,250 miles. From the North Cape in the north to Cape Matapan in the south, it measures about 2,450 miles.

Asia occupies almost one-third of the Earth's land surface. At its greatest extent, from west to east, the distance is some 6,000 miles. From Cape Chelyuskin in the north to Cape Bulus in the south is about 5,375 miles.

Africa has about one-fifth of the land surface of the globe. From Cape Verde, on the Atlantic, to Ras Hafun, on the Indian Ocean, is a distance of about 4,500 miles. From Cape Blanco, in the north, to Cape Agulhas, in the south, is about 5,000 miles.

North America is almost twice the size of Europe. Its greatest north-south distance (from 7° N. to 83° N.) is some 6,000 miles. From east to west at the widest point, it measures about 3,000 miles.

South America is also nearly twice as large as Europe. Its greatest north-south extent (from Punta Gallinas to Cape Horn) is some 4,600 miles. The broadest part of the continent (Cape Branco-Punta Parina) measures about 3,000 miles.

Australia is about twenty-five times the size of Great Britain. It is approximately 2,000 miles across, from north to south, the greatest east-west distance being about 2,400 miles.

The Antarctic continent has a total area of about 5 million sq. miles, i.e., it is about a third larger than Europe. It is ice-covered and this cover is thought to be 6,000 ft. thick in places.

The People

The following figures were published by the United Nations Statistical Office for 1954:

Oceans of the World

The chief oceans of the world and the areas of their basins are given below:

	Approx. Area Sq. Miles
Pacific	63,986,000
Atlantic	31,530,000
Indian	28,350,000
Antarctic	5,700,000
Arctic	5,541,600

The greatest ocean depth so far recorded is in the Pacific Ocean, where a depth of 35,640 ft. was registered by a survey ship of the Royal Navy, at a point 200 miles south-west of Guam (July 1951). Previously a depth of 35,410 ft. had been recorded off the island of Mindanao (Philippines). The Porto Rico Trench in the Atlantic Ocean has a depth of 30,143 ft., while the Sunda Trench in the Indian Ocean is 22,986 ft. deep. Depths from 13,000 ft. to 17,850 ft. have been recorded in the Antarctic and Arctic Oceans.

Off Cape Matapan (Greece), the Mediterranean Sea has a depth of 14,435 ft. The greatest recorded depth in the comparatively shallow North Sea is 1,998 ft. in the Skagerrak. The Baltic does not exceed 1,300 ft. in depth.

The highest waterfall in Great Britain is Glomach, Ross-shire, Scotland, which has a fall of 370 ft.

Most famous of the world's waterfalls are Niagara Falls on the Canada-U.S.A. border in North America and the Victoria Falls on the Zambesi in Rhodesia. The Niagara Falls are divided into two: the American and the Horseshoe Falls. The first is 1,080 ft. wide and the second 3,100 ft. wide, and there is an average fall of 165 ft. The Victoria Falls are just over a mile wide and have a fall of 357 ft.

Not so well known but equally majestic are the Iguassu Falls, a series of cataracts extending to a width of over 2 miles and having a fall of over 200 ft. These falls on the Iguassu River are near the border of three South American countries: Argentina, Brazil and Paraguay.

Some Famous Winds

Chinook. A warm, dry wind, usually south-westerly, experienced in winter and spring along the eastern side of the Rocky Mountains in Canada and the U.S.A.

Föhn. Like the chinook, a warm, dry wind. It blows down from the northern Alps, in Switzerland, especially in spring and autumn. Usually southerly.

Gregale. A cool, northerly wind of the southern central Mediterranean.

Harmattan. A hot, dry wind which blows from the Sahara across West Africa.

Khamsin. A hot, dry southerly wind experienced in Egypt (April to June).

Mistral. A cold, northerly wind, experienced chiefly in winter, along north-west Mediterranean shores.

Norther. A cold and often violent wind which blows across the southern States of the U.S.A.

Pampero. A cold, south-westerly wind which blows across the pampas of South America, especially in summer.

Sirocco. A hot, southerly wind, originating in the Sahara, which often crosses the Mediterranean to affect the countries of Southern Europe, especially in spring (cf. Khamsin above).

Trade Winds. Winds blowing, often regularly, towards the equator from the south-east and north-east.

3. THE UNITED NATIONS ORGANIZATION

During the Second World War it became obvious to the nations opposing Nazi Germany and her allies that, when peace came, some new international organization would be needed to take the place of the League of Nations. A beginning was made with the declaration of 1st January 1942, by which the United Kingdom, U.S.A., U.S.S.R. and China bound themselves to the purposes and principles of the Atlantic Charter. The foundations of the new organization were laid by the 'Moscow Pact' (1st November 1943) and its detailed design was shaped at meetings at Dumbarton Oaks, near Washington, D.C., in which the same four powers took part. The plan was discussed at the San Francisco Conference (25th April to 26th June 1945) and on the last day of the conference the Charter of the United Nations was signed by the representatives of fifty nations.

For Peace and Progress

The Preamble of the Charter contains a general statement of policy and runs thus:

'We, the peoples of the United Nations, determined to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small; and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained; and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom; and for these ends to practise tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours; and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security; to ensure by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest; and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples, Have resolved to combine our efforts to accomplish these aims.'

The United Nations formally came into existence on 24th October 1945. Its permanent headquarters are at Manhattan, New York. There are six principal organs:

1. The General Assembly

This consists of all members. Each may be represented at meetings by five representatives, but has only one vote. Each has the right to be represented on the Main Committees (Political and Security; Economic and Financial; Social, Humanitarian and Cultural; Trusteeship; Administrative and Budgetary; Legal). The General Assembly normally meets once a year (on the third Tuesday in September), but special sessions may also be held.

2. The Security Council

This consists of five permanent members (U.K., U.S.A., U.S.S.R., France, China) and six non-permanent members (elected for a two-year term). As its name suggests, the Security Council has as its prime purpose the maintenance of peace and security.

On procedural matters an affirmative vote by seven members of the Council is sufficient, but on all other questions the concurring votes of the permanent members is essential. In other words, the power of veto can be exercised by any permanent member. But no permanent member may vote on any measure put forward for a peaceful settlement of any dispute in which he is a party.

3. Economic and Social Council
Standards of living, human rights, economic, social and cultural matters, education—these and kindred matters are the concern of the Economic and Social Council, which has established various important commissions and agencies. These include: United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF); United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO); Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO); International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO); International Labour Organization (ILO); International Trade Organization (ITO); World Health Organization (WHO); Universal Postal Union (UPU); International Telecommunications Union (ITU); International Bank for Reconstruction and Development; International Monetary Fund; World Meteorological Organization (WMO); Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO).

Certain of these organizations, e.g., the ILO, were operating before the United Nations Organization was established.

4. The Trusteeship Council
This body deals with territories administered by Trustees, approved by the Council. The territories held under this system are: Tanganyika, British Cameroons, British Togoland (Britain); Nauru, New Guinea (Australia); Western Samoa (New Zealand); French Cameroons, French Togoland (France); Ruanda-Urundi (Belgium); Somaliland (Italy); Pacific Islands—the Marshalls, Marianas and Carolines (U.S.A.).

5. The International Court of Justice
This Court is the chief judicial organ of the United Nations. It has fifteen judges, elected by the Security Council and General Assembly. Its meetings are held at The Hague (Netherlands).

6. The Secretariat
This is composed of the Secretary-General and an international staff appointed by him under regulations made by the General Assembly.

5. THE BRITISH COMMONWEALTH OF NATIONS

The British Commonwealth of Nations is a voluntary association of independent nations, together with their colonies, protectorates, Trusteeship territories and other dependencies. The land area occupied by the British Commonwealth is about 14,435,000 sq. miles and its total population has been estimated at 639,807,000. The British Commonwealth thus extends over approximately a quarter of the Earth's land surface and contains about a quarter of the world's population.

The member countries of the Commonwealth are: the United Kingdom, Australia, Canada, Ceylon, India (Republic), New Zealand, Pakistan (Republic) and South Africa. These are entirely independent and self-governing nations.

Many variations are found in the status of other countries and territories within the Commonwealth. Some are on the verge, as it were, of independence, others are well advanced on the same road; some are just beginning to take a share in the management of their own affairs, others have still to reach this stage.

The Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, for example, is on the brink of becoming a fully-fledged member of the Commonwealth; Nigeria and the Gold Coast, too, are within reach of independence. Commonwealth countries in the West Indies already have a considerable measure of self-government and the British Caribbean Federation, which will elect its first Federal Government in 1958, will take them farther along the road to independence.

7. ALLIANCES, TREATIES, ETC.

ANZUS Pact

This Pacific security pact was signed in San Francisco on 1st September 1951 by the representatives of Australia, New Zealand and the United States (hence the name ANZUS). Each country concerned recognizes that 'an armed attack in the Pacific area on any of the parties would be dangerous to its own peace and security' and agrees to 'act to meet the common danger in accordance with its constitutional processes.' From the Australian and New Zealand viewpoint, the pact is a guarantee of American help in the event of any aggression. From the American viewpoint, the pact is one of several treaties by which the United States has built up a security system in the Pacific area.

Arab League

The Arab League came into being on 22nd March 1945, when the Alexandria Convention was signed by the representatives of Egypt, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Lebanon, Jordan, Syria and Yemen. In March 1953 Libya joined the League, and in January 1956 the Sudan was admitted to membership. The League exists to preserve the independence and sovereignty of its members and to further their common interests. A treaty for collective defence and economic co-operation was signed in Cairo in April 1950. The permanent headquarters of the League is in Cairo, where there is also the Institute for Higher Arabic Cultural Studies, which was set up by the League in 1953. The signing of the Baghdad Pact in 1955 (see below) by Turkey and Iraq cut sharply across the League's collective defence treaty and found little favour with Egypt and Saudi Arabia, who regarded it as a violation of that treaty.

Baghdad Pact
A treaty of mutual co-operation in security and defence was signed by the representatives of Turkey and Iraq in February 1955 at Baghdad. Shortly after, the United Kingdom concluded a defence agreement with Iraq and acceded to the Baghdad Pact. In September 1955 Pakistan joined the treaty countries and was followed in October by Persia. The United States, which has given its support to the treaty, maintains military and political liaison with the treaty organization. Baghdad is the seat of the permanent council.

Brussels Treaty
See Western European Union.

Colombo Plan
The 'Colombo Plan for Co-operative Economic Development in South and South-East Asia' was first published on 28th November 1950 and was initially a British Commonwealth scheme to help the development and economic progress of the Asian lands of the British Commonwealth. It was not long, however, before the scheme was widened to bring in other Asian countries. The first members of the Consultative Committee were Australia, Canada, Ceylon, India, New Zealand, Pakistan, the United Kingdom, Malaya and British Borneo. Countries which later joined were: Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos (1950); Burma, Nepal (1952); Indonesia (1953); Japan, the Philippine Republic, Thailand (1954). The United States is also associated with the venture, and there is close liaison with certain of the specialized agencies of the United Nations.

The provision of grants and loans, especially by the western member countries; the training of scientists, engineers and other technicians, doctors and teachers; mutual consultation and help; the launching of new agricultural, industrial and other projects—all these are aspects of the Colombo Plan, which has already done much to aid the advance of the less fortunate member countries.

Council of Europe
See Western European Union.

European Coal and Steel Community
This organization came into being in Paris on 18th April 1951 with the signing of a treaty by Belgium, France, Germany (Western), Italy, Luxemburg and the Netherlands. Its headquarters are in Luxemburg. The United Kingdom is linked with the Community by the agreement of December 1954, which established a 'Council of Association' between the U.K. and the Community. Other European countries (Austria, Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland) and the United States and Japan have delegations at the High Authority of the Community. By August 1954 the coal, iron ore and steel of the member countries had been virtually freed from normal international restrictions and customs duties, etc., and enjoyed a free market within the Community.

F.O.A. (Foreign Operations Administration)
This American organization is responsible for administering the foreign aid projects of the United States and is really the successor of the Mutual Security Agency and of the earlier Administration which directed the Marshall Plan for European Recovery. Its headquarters are in Washington, D.C. Defence, economic development, technical assistance, aid to refugees, the provision of machinery and raw materials—these are some of the fields in which F.O.A. helps 'friendly' countries to strengthen the mutual security and individual and collective defences of the free world.'

NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organization)
On 4th April 1949 the North Atlantic Treaty was signed in Washington by the representatives of Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Iceland, Italy, Luxemburg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, the United Kingdom and the United States. The treaty, which amounted to an extension of the Brussels Treaty of 1948 (see Western European Union below), pledges the member countries to mutual assistance should any of them be attacked in Europe or North America. Greece and Turkey were admitted to the NATO Organization in 1952; Western Germany in 1955.

The headquarters of NATO are in Paris. Its three defence commands are: Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers, Europe (SHAPE); Atlantic Ocean Command; and the Channel Command.

At a NATO Council meeting at Paris in May 1956, it was decided to examine 'ways and means to improve and extend NATO co-operation in non-military fields and develop greater unity within the Atlantic command.'

OCAS (Organization of Central American States)
Although this organization was formed in 1951, its first formal conference was not held until August 1954, when representatives of the member countries (Costa Rica, Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua) met at Antigua, Guatemala. Panama was represented only by observers, not wishing to join the organization. The purpose of OCAS is to promote economic, social and cultural co-operation between member countries.

OEEC (Organization for European Economic Co-operation)
OEEC was set up in 1948 to administer the European Recovery Programme proposed by Mr Marshall, the U.S. Secretary of State, and accepted by sixteen nations (Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Greece, Iceland, the Irish Republic, Italy, Luxemburg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey and the United Kingdom) and the western zones of Germany. The Marshall Plan ' itself was completed by 1952, and in more recent years OEEC has been chiefly concerned with monetary matters and with removing trade restrictions between the member countries. Its technical experts have advised on problems in agriculture, industry, transport, power and other matters. A special agency was set up in 1953 to help the co-ordination of productivity in the member countries. OEEC headquarters are in Paris.

OAS (Organization of American States)
Since 1890 conferences of the American republics have been held to promote understanding and co-operation between these countries. In 1948, at the Ninth International Conference of American States at Bogota, Colombia, the Charter of the Organization of American States was adopted. The twenty-one member countries of OAS are: Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, the United States, Uruguay and Venezuela. The headquarters of OAS are in Washington, D.C.; its principal permanent body is the Pan American Union.

SEATO (South-East Asia Treaty Organization)
This treaty for the collective defence of South-East Asia was signed in Manila on 8th September 1954 by the representatives of Australia, France, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Philippines, Thailand (Siam), the United Kingdom and the United States. The Pacific Charter, issued by the member countries, declared their wish ' to establish a firm basis for common action to maintain peace and security in South-East Asia and the South-West Pacific.' The headquarters of SEATO are at Bangkok.

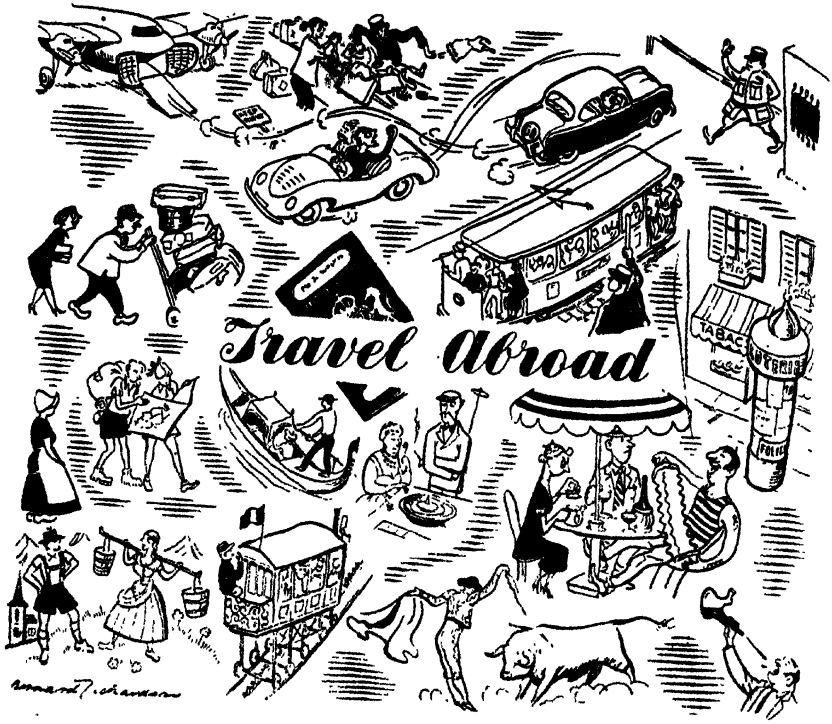
Warsaw Treaty Organization
In May 1955, at Warsaw, a twenty-year ' treaty of friendship, co-operation and mutual assistance ' was signed by the representatives of Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic (Eastern Germany), Hungary, Poland, Rumania and the Soviet Union. China also pledged her support to the treaty. The treaty provided for the establishment of a unified military command. The Permanent Commission and Secretariat of the Organization, and the supreme military headquarters, are in Moscow.

Western European Union
Closer co-operation and understanding between the countries of Western Europe has come about through a number of agreements, e.g., the Anglo-French Treaty signed at Dunkirk in 1947; the customs union of the Benelux countries (Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxemburg) which was brought into being in 1947; the European Recovery Programme; and the European Coal and Steel Community.

Of special importance was the Brussels Treaty signed on 17th March 1948 by the foreign ministers of Belgium, France, Luxemburg, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom. This treaty provided for collective defence, and for economic, cultural and social co-operation. Its defence system was later broadened by the North Atlantic Treaty.

A treaty to set up a European Defence Community was afterwards prepared. This would have brought Western Germany into the security system, but the project was rejected by France in August 1954, and it seemed that the entire western defensive system was in jeopardy. It was, in fact, saved at the London Nine-Power Conference (26th September to 3rd October 1954) at which were represented Belgium, Canada, France, Western Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Luxemburg, the United States and the United Kingdom.

At this conference it was decided to end the occupation of Western Germany; invite both Western Germany and Italy to join the Brussels Treaty system; and to invite Western Germany to enter NATO. Moreover, the United Kingdom undertook not to withdraw her land and air forces from Europe. Western Union was officially inaugurated on 7th May 1955, two days after Western Germany had been granted full sovereign rights.



The first meeting of the W.E.U. Council was held in Paris on 8th May and was attended by the foreign ministers of the member countries (Belgium, France, Western Germany, Italy, Luxemburg, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom).

Western Union found its political expression in the Council of Europe, which was another outcome of the Brussels Treaty. The Council, comprising a Committee of Ministers and a Consultative Assembly, was established on 5th May 1949 by Belgium, Denmark, France, the Irish Republic, Italy, Luxemburg, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and the United Kingdom. Other countries which joined subsequently were: Turkey and Greece (1949); Iceland, the Saar and Western Germany (1950). In March 1956 Austria signified her intention of joining the Council.

The first Assembly took place at Strasbourg in 1949. Strasbourg is the seat of the Council and of the annual meetings of the Assembly. The headquarters of Western European Union are in London.

World Council of Churches
The Council dates from 23rd August 1948, when more than 350 delegates (representing some 147 churches in 44 countries) met at Amsterdam. But its history has roots in much earlier endeavours, such as the World Conference on Christian Missions (Edinburgh, 1910); the International Missionary Council (1921) and its conferences; the conferences of the Faith and Order Movement, and of the Life and Work Movement.

The Council has its headquarters at Geneva and maintains regional offices in London and New York.

8. HOW TO GO

Not so many years ago, people who wanted to travel abroad, whether for business or pleasure, made their own arrangements and without formalities of any kind, travelled to any destination they wished. Today you cannot travel without a valid passport; and in addition, some countries such as Spain, Yugoslavia and all countries behind the 'Iron Curtain' require an entry visa.

Currency Regulations

In addition to passports and visas there are certain currency regulations which may alter from time to time. At present not more than £10 sterling can be taken out of the United Kingdom, and you are not allowed to spend more than £100 for an adult and £70 for each child under 12 years of age. This is the basic travel allowance for holidays abroad, but an additional allowance of £250 is granted for Norway, Sweden and Denmark, and special allowances can be obtained for business travel. There are no currency restrictions when travelling to countries in the sterling area (e.g. Malta, Gibraltar, Cyprus, Bermuda). Many countries limit the import and export of their own currency notes. It is advisable therefore to take the bulk of one's spending money in Travellers' Cheques, although it is useful to have with one quite small amounts of currency for each of the countries one is travelling through, for refreshments or small purchases needed en route. Travellers' Cheques can be changed into local currency, at many places at official rates, less a small discount for the service provided. It is best to change Travellers' Cheques as required, enough say for two or three days' spending at a time.

Customs Regulations

Customs regulations must be strictly observed, both as to what one takes out of the country and what one brings back from abroad.

All baggage leaving and entering every country is subject to examination by the Customs at frontiers, ports and sometimes at departure or destination stations. Passengers are required to make a full and accurate declaration of all personal effects. For holiday travellers returning from the Continent the strictest examination usually takes place on return to the United Kingdom. No attempt should be made to fool the Customs officers, to whom nothing is new.

Travel Agencies

In spite of all these regulations, travel abroad for the ordinary traveller has never been simpler. Proof of this is that every year something like 1,500,000 Britons travel abroad. Without doubt this is due to the increasing activities of travel agencies which have grown up between the two wars and especially since the last war. Their success is due to two main factors: (1) their ability to offer attractive and cheap holidays; and (2) the fact that they free travellers from worry and care by making all the necessary arrangements for hotel and travel, and often provide additional services at the holiday resort itself. Some agencies have been established for many years, others are quite new. Most of them offer anything from absolute luxury in hotels which not many years ago catered only for the very rich, to the simple pension where a cheap holiday may be had if one is prepared to forego the 'trimmings.' Some agencies specialise in certain types of holiday, i.e. motor coach travel, sea or river cruises, or the increasingly popular air plus coach travel. Most agencies, however, offer a very varied programme.

There are several reasons why travel agencies can offer holidays at favourable prices. Firstly by supplying continental hotels with a steady supply of bookings, they obtain cheaper rates than those that would be granted to the individual traveller. Even more important, they can hire special trains, or reserve whole coaches on ordinary trains, or obtain special concessions for party travel, which means that they can often offer a week's holiday inclusive of hotel accommodation for very nearly the same money as the rail tickets would normally cost the individual traveller.

Of equal importance, however, are the services provided by the travel agencies. They help you to obtain passports and visas, arrange luggage insurance, provide the necessary amounts of foreign currency and Travellers' Cheques, and issue detailed itineraries, with timings and places of change en route. They also provide rail and air tickets and seat reservations.

Travel Agencies' 'V' Form

Mention should be made of the mysterious 'V Form' allowance which puzzles many people who are travelling abroad for the first time through a travel agency. The explanation is that the cost of the holiday quoted by the agency is paid for, before the traveller leaves, in sterling. Obviously the agency must pay for part of the services offered (e.g. the hotel bill) in foreign currency, which is deducted from the travellers' basic allowance. This amount is known as the 'V Form' value of the tour. The balance of the travellers basic allowance can be converted into foreign currency for personal spending abroad. It is worth remembering, however, that thousands of travellers enjoy holidays abroad without spending their full basic allowance.

Most travel agencies not only make the preliminary arrangements, but provide services during the journey and at the resort itself. They usually have uniformed staff stationed at the main stations in London, and such ports as Dover, Folkestone, Calais, Boulogne and Ostend. In addition there is usually a courier on the train who assists travellers with any problems and difficulties that may arise. Furthermore many of the agencies have their own English speaking representatives resident at resorts and from whom the visitor can seek information about excursions, rambles, weather conditions, local transport and advize generally on a host of topics. It is worth mentioning that many local excursions can be paid for in advance in the United Kingdom, the cost of which will not be deducted from the basic travel allowance.

Comfortable Travelling

An interesting feature of foreign travel is the constant improvement in various means of transport. On 3rd June 1956 third class travel on railways was abolished on the Continent. The new second class coaches are somewhat better than the old third class coaches, and the new second class fare is no more than the old third class fare. First class coaches now have six seats only to a compartment, and the fare is only a little higher than the previous second class fare.

Another feature on continental trains is the increasing amount of sleeping accommodation available. Most trains passing through France carry Couchettes which provide six sleeping berths to the compartment, complete with blankets and pillowcases, but no linen. Couchette service is also available on many German trains. The additional cost of the Couchette service is quite moderate. For those who prefer to sleep 'in style,' first and second class sleepers, with linen provided, and equipped with wash basins, and containing a maximum of three berths, are often available.

Air Travel

The biggest revolution in transport has taken place in air travel. A vast net of airlines spans the Continent and practically every holiday resort is no more than 4 hours' journey by rail from the nearest airport. 'Tourist service' is now available on all routes. This means that aircraft are fitted with a larger number of seats than before. There are 'Day Tourist' and 'Night Tourist' services, in addition to 'First Class' services. On 'First Class' and 'Day Tourist' services meals are provided without extra charge, but refreshments only are provided on 'Night Tourist' flights. 'Night Tourist' flights are again divided into 'Midweek' and 'Week-end.' 'Night Tourist' flights show a considerable reduction in cost especially for 'Midweek.' The disadvantage of 'Night Tourist' flights is that the traveller has usually to spend the early hours of the morning sitting in an easy chair at the airport waiting for the first morning train to take him to his destination. To make air travel even cheaper, many of the travel agencies charter aircraft of their own, which often makes the journey cheaper than rail, especially if one takes into account meals and refreshments that are usually taken on trains and in buffets on a long rail journey.

Baggage

Hand baggage consists of small portable articles such as handbags, hat boxes and travelling bags which passengers take with them into railway compartments and aboard ships. There is nothing to pay for conveyance of such articles, but a charge is made for any item a passenger may wish to include among Registered Baggage. All baggage should be clearly labelled, and all old labels removed.

Baggage on aircraft is limited and the free weights are generally as follows: 33 lb. (Tourist Class) and 44 lb. (First Class) on British domestic services; 44 lb. (Tourist Class) and 66 lb. (First Class) on international services. Heavy baggage should be despatched in advance by air freight or surface transport.

Children and Reduced Rates

A word should be said about children. Children under 4 years of age are not charged for on trains. Children between 4 and 10 years of age travel at half price, except in Switzerland where the half fare applies up to 16 years of age, and for resorts on the French and Belgian coasts up to 14 years. On air routes children up to 2 years of age receive 90 per cent. reduction, and 50 per cent. reduction up to 12 years. Reductions for children at hotels vary considerably. Switzerland is the only country which grants reductions up to 12 years. Elsewhere, on average, children up to 6 years of age may get 50 per cent. reduction, and between 6 and 10 years of age about 30 per cent. reduction.

Book Early

In conclusion, do book early for your holiday, preferably not later than January, especially if you intend to go abroad during July and August. Travel agencies usually ask for a deposit when booking. Note carefully the conditions that apply should you unavoidably have to cancel your arrangements at the last moment.

9. PASSPORTS

To travel abroad you will need a valid Passport, and for some countries (e.g. Spain) you will require an entry or transit visa.

Any of the following Passport Offices will provide forms for Passport application:

London: Clive House, Petty France, S.W.1.
Liverpool: India Buildings, Water Street, Liverpool 2.
Glasgow: 1 Princes Square, 48 Buchanan Street, Glasgow, C.1.

And they can also be obtained from any local office of the Ministry of Labour and National Service.

Applications

Foreign Office Passports are granted to (i) citizens of the United Kingdom and Colonies; (ii) British subjects without citizenship; (iii) British Protected Persons. Citizens of Commonwealth countries should make application to their High Commissioner in London; and citizens of the Irish Republic, to their Embassy.

Husband and wife may travel with a joint Passport. But the particulars of the wife must be given when application is made; they cannot be added after the Passport has been issued. On marriage, a woman should obtain a new Passport in her married name; alternatively, her husband should obtain a new Passport which also provides for his wife. A joint Passport cannot be used by the wife when she is travelling alone.

Children under sixteen years of age may be entered on their parents' Passports. But if a separate Passport is needed, application should be made by father or guardian on a special form. On reaching the age of sixteen, a child must have a separate Passport. Applications must be accompanied by the written consent of father or guardian.

Applications for Passports require recommendation by a person of standing who knows the applicant (Section 9). Suitable persons are Members of Parliament, Justices of the Peace, ministers of religion, doctors, solicitors, bank managers, civil servants, public officials, etc.

Applications must be accompanied by the applicant's birth certificate. Naturalized registered British subjects must produce their naturalization or registration document.

Two photographs of the applicant (and of his wife, if a joint Passport is required) must accompany the application. The photographs should be unmounted. The paper on which they are printed should be thin, and must not be glazed on the back. The photographs should show the applicant full face, without a hat; they must be no larger than 2¼ in. by 2 in. and no smaller than 2 in. by 1¼ in.

Validity

In the first instance, Passports are normally valid for five years. They may subsequently be renewed (for consecutive periods of one to five years), but are not valid beyond ten years from the first date of issue. When that time comes, or if there is no further space for visas in the Passport, application must be made for a new Passport.

Passports are available for travel only in the countries named, but additional countries may be covered by an endorsement.

10. VISAS

Holders of Passports inscribed 'United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland' and in which the national status is described as 'British Subject,' do not require visas for entry (length of stay allowed varies) or transit in these countries:

Austria
Belgium
Cuba
Denmark
Finland
France
Germany, Western Greece
Iceland
Italy
Liechtenstein
Luxemburg
Monaco
Netherlands (Holland)
Norway
Portugal (including Madeira and Azores)
Saar
San Marino
Sweden
Switzerland
Turkey.

There are also special facilities for holders of Passports issued in the British Colonies.

11. TAKING YOUR CAR

(Prepared with the assistance of the Automobile Association)

Taking your car or motor-cycle abroad is quite a straightforward affair, provided that the formalities are observed and a little thought is given to the matter beforehand. Rules and regulations have a habit of changing, and it will pay even the experienced traveller to seek the advice and help of his motoring organization.

Here is a summary of the chief points which will need your attention:

Decide which countries you want to visit; this will determine the documents you need. Fix the exact dates on which you wish to leave and return to the U.K.; this will allow you to reserve space for your vehicle for both outward and return journeys by ship or air ferry. Demand for space is high, especially during the peak holiday period (June to September), changes in dates cannot be made easily, and provisional bookings are not accepted.

Passports have been mentioned already. Your normal British driving licence is acceptable in Belgium, France, Luxemburg, Norway, Italy and Switzerland, but an International Driving Permit is required for other countries (for yourself and any other members of the party who may drive). Permits cannot be issued to people under eighteen years of age or to those who hold British provisional licences.

Carnet de Passages en Douanes. The Carnet is really a documentary bond or Customs passbook which enables you to take your vehicle in and out of the country you are visiting without paying any duty. To obtain it, you subscribe to certain undertakings: these are cancelled on your return, if the Carnet has been properly discharged. You are, however, personally responsible at all times during your journey if you do anything which results in a foreign Customs claim being made against you.

People who do not reside in the U.K., or who intend taking a vehicle beyond Western Europe, will be required to make a cash deposit or to provide a banker's indemnity—to guarantee duty liability.

Any caravan or trailer also needs its Carnet plus an inventory of contents in duplicate. This inventory must be written in the languages of the countries to be visited and must show the description, number, weight (in kilograms and grams) and value of each item. Value must be given in the currency of each country concerned. Special regulations are in force for caravans in France and Switzerland.

The Carnet is not unlike a bank paying-in book. The outer part of each page is removed by the Customs when you enter a country; the inner part, when you leave. The counterfoil records entry and exit, and so is your discharge. Each sheet thus covers a single visit to a country.

International Certificate for Motor Vehicles. This is no longer required for Belgium, France, Luxemburg, Norway, Italy and Switzerland, provided that you, the importer, are the owner of the car. The Carnet plus your British registration book, will cover you in these countries; but the registration book must be in your name. The Certificate will be needed for visits to other countries, and also if the registration book is in someone else's name.

Insurance. Make sure that your policy covers transit and Continental risks and that your insurance company knows your dates of departure and return. Some countries require an International Insurance Certificate (a 'green card'). Your insurance company will supply this, if it is needed for any of the countries you intend to visit.

It is wise to insure your baggage, etc., against loss on the tour.

G.B. Plate. This is an essential. Make sure that you obtain one which conforms with the International Convention. Some smaller plates look neater, but may not be acceptable to authorities abroad.

Foreign Currency. See your bank or travel agency.

Other Important Points

Lighting. Vertical double-dipping is the normal system on the Continent. Other systems may have to be modified, if much night driving is likely. France has a national yellow-headlight rule, and if this country is to be visited, it is worth buying the amber-coloured bulbs made specially for Continental use.

Port of Departure. You may have to stay overnight here to be at the quayside at the proper time in the morning. If so, accommodation must be arranged. Make sure that the British currency you carry does not exceed the legal limit (at the present time, £10). Export of foodstuffs is also limited to 22 lb. It is worth taking a can of your favourite oil, especially if Spain is in your programme.

Spares may also be taken—enough for ordinary running repairs will cause no difficulty. But have ready a list in triplicate, showing weights and values, and be able to account for any used. A wise precaution is to take with you a maker's list of spares, in case you have to send for any while you are abroad. Have your vehicle thoroughly serviced before you leave on your holiday.

Know your engine and chassis numbers and where they are located. Make sure they really are there—and that they agree with those shown in the registration book and Carnet. Customs officials always want to see them. Make sure that car and driving licences will be valid when you return to the U.K.

Triptyque for a Single Journey

Since 1st May 1956 a new Customs document for car owners and motor-cyclists taking their vehicles abroad has been available in Great Britain (from the A.A., the R.A.C. and the R.S.A.C.). Known as a 'Triptyque for a Single Journey,' this new temporary importation document does not take the place of the comprehensive Carnet supplied to members by the three British motoring organizations, which is valid for twelve months for any number of journeys to at least sixty-eight different countries.

The R.A.C., the A.A. and the R.S.A.C. issue the triptyque to members and non-members alike for a fee of 6s. each.

The triptyque is available, for a single journey only, to any one of a number of European countries, including: Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, Luxemburg, the Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Switzerland.

The new triptyque is not a car passport and, unlike the Carnet, separate documents are required for each country on both the outward and return journeys.

Car Ferry Routes

By Sea: Dover–Boulogne,* Dover–Calais,* Dover–Ostend Car Ferry,* Dover–Dunkirk,* Newhaven–Dieppe, Southampton–Le Havre, Southampton–St Malo, Folkestone–Calais, Folkestone-Boulogne. There are also regular services to Hook of Holland and Scandinavian ports. On routes marked with an asterisk, cars are driven on and off the ferries; on other routes, vehicles are crane loaded.

By Air: Lydd (Ferryfield)–Le Touquet, Calais, Ostend; Southampton (Eastleigh)–Cherbourg; Deauville; Gatwick–Le Touquet; Birmingham (Elmdon)–Le Touquet; Southend–Calais.

13. ATOMIC ENERGY

In the early years of the present century the atom was regarded as a minute, hard, spherical ball of 'pure' indivisible matter. Today, the atom is conceived as a sphere or spheroid of very nearly empty space. At its centre, and occupying less than one-billionth of its volume, is a 'nucleus' (a complex particle of unknown nature) carrying a charge of positive electricity. Revolving about this, much as the planets revolve about the sun, are a number of even smaller particles called 'electrons' which carry charges of negative electricity.

In more recent developments these charges are conceived as not requiring 'particles' to carry them, but as being mere locations of intense forces, and the orbits have been replaced by concentric or eccentric shells of energy in various states of vibration.

Elements and Isotopes

The charge of an electron is the natural unit of negative electricity. The nucleus of a hydrogen atom, which has only one planetary electron, is regarded as carrying the natural unit of positive electricity and is called a 'proton.' All protons are exactly alike, and all electrons are exactly alike, but a proton weighs about 1,840 times the mass of an electron.

It was at first thought that all the elements were capable of complete description as systems of different numbers of protons and electrons, the characteristic properties of an element being determined solely by the total positive charge on the protons in the nucleus. Thus, the weight of an electron being negligible, the atoms of all the elements should weigh an exact multiple of the weight of one proton, and further, all atoms of the same element should weigh exactly the same.

Refined experiments showed this to be not quite true, but the problem was solved by the discovery that the nucleus of an atom may also contain a varying number of 'neutrons' (particles of about the same weight as a proton but carrying no electric charge). The presence of neutrons explains how atoms which are identical in their chemical properties may differ slightly in weight, and such atoms are called 'isotopes.'

Atomic Forces

One of the difficulties in this picture of the atom concerns the manner in which the protons in a nucleus are held together. The negative electrons are held to the atom by the attraction of the positive nucleus, for opposite charges attract one another. But like charges repel one another, and it is not at all clear how the positively charged protons are prevented from flying apart. A new force able to hold the nucleus together has therefore had to be recognized. This 'nuclear force' is enormously more powerful than the electric forces, but it has a very small effective range.

Atomic Energy

It is clear that the atom as now conceived is open to dissection in two principal ways. First, the planetary electrons might be stripped off, leaving only the bare, positively-charged nucleus. Second, the nucleus itself might be 'split' or in some way damaged.

The removal of the outermost electrons is comparatively easy, and occurs when matter is heated, rubbed, electrified or dissolved. Such processes do not change the nature of an atom, but only its state. To split its nucleus, however, would transmute it into an atom of another element, and to accomplish this would require about a million times as much energy. However, when the nuclear constituents are either forcibly separated or broken, the energy formerly sealed up in the nucleus is released, and it is this which is known as atomic energy.

Splitting the Atom

The ordinary forces available to man are quite inadequate to break the nucleus of an atom, but fortunately for investigators there are certain unstable elements in nature, such as radium, whose nuclei spontaneously break up and discharge particles endowed with energy of the right order. If atoms are bombarded with such particles some of them stand a chance of having their nuclei destroyed.

A direct hit is, however, a rare occurrence because of the extreme minuteness of the nucleus at the centre of the atom, and results can be achieved only by directing a concentrated jet of missiles on to the chosen target. It was more or less in this way that the first atomic transmutations were achieved by man in 1919. The missiles used on this occasion were the alpha-particles emitted spontaneously by radium at a rate of some 148,000,000,000 per second per gramme of radium.

Artificial Transmutation

In 1932 Cockcroft and Walton succeeded in producing the first atomic transmutations by purely artificial means. They were able to accelerate a stream of protons (hydrogen atoms stripped of their electrons) by passing them through a vacuum tube running through two metal rings connected to extremely high-voltage electric supplies. The protons struck a target of lithium with enormous velocity, transmuting it into helium. The modern 'linear accelerator' is a development of this idea.

The Cyclotron

The performance of linear accelerators is limited by the difficulty of maintaining a high vacuum in very long tubes. The 'cyclotron' and similar devices overcome this difficulty by discharging the missiles into the space between the poles of enormous magnets (sometimes weighing several thousand tons). The magnetic field causes the particles to pursue a spiral or circular course, and they are accelerated at each half-turn by electrical means.

In a large 'bevatron' they may circle round quarter of a million times in a small fraction of a second before being thrown out at the edge with a speed approaching that of light and a force equivalent to some thousand million volts of electricity. Such apparatus is able to cause many different kinds of transmutation of the elements, and provides a large proportion of the data upon which modern nuclear physical theory is built.

Nuclear Fission

The results of such experiments are of theoretical value only. The smallest visible speck of dust may contain some thousand million million atoms, so that the smashing of one or two—or even of one or two million—is of no direct practical significance. The cost of achieving these infinitesimal results is enormous, and the useful exploitation of atomic transformations was not feasible until Hahn and Strassmann discovered nuclear 'fission' in 1939.

They found that the uranium nucleus could be split into two nearly equal portions by bombardment with neutrons, and the significant fact was that whenever a neutron found a target the product included at least two more neutrons. Thus, once the process was started there was a continuous multiplication of neutrons in what is known as a 'chain reaction.'

Common uranium responds in this way only to extremely fast neutrons and many of the collisions are abortive, but the rare isotope, uranium-235, is vulnerable to much slower neutrons. Even with uranium-235 the chain reaction cannot be sustained in a small lump of the metal for too many neutrons escape from the surface, but in a sufficiently large lump the chain reaction starts spontaneously (because stray neutrons are always present).

The Atomic Bomb

The speeds of the neutrons, though slow by atomic standards, are of the order of two or three miles per second, and the distances between atoms are of the order of a thousand-millionth of an inch, so that the fission of a single atom in a lump of uranium-235 might be expected to result in the entire destruction of the lump in a very small fraction of a second, with the simultaneous release of an enormous quantity of atomic energy. The result of the destruction of a pound of uranium by this means would be equivalent to the explosion of 20,000 tons of T.N.T. This is the principle of the atomic bomb.

The forms in which the atomic energy is manifest fall into three chief classes: atomic missiles travelling at prodigious velocities, short electro-magnetic radiations (ranging from light rays to X-rays and gamma-rays), and heat rays producing temperatures up to a few million degrees. The temperatures attained may be a thousand times hotter than the visible surface of the sun, and far exceed the boiling-point of all known substances.

The Atomic Pile

The industrial use of atomic energy is chiefly concerned with the utilisation of this enormous heat, and the 'atomic pile' or 'nuclear reactor' is a device for releasing it slowly at temperatures which may be employed for driving steam-engines and similar machines. This end is achieved by distributing the uranium (in the form of rods) among suitable assemblages of graphite blocks, or immersing them in heavy water, these substances—known as 'moderators'—being able to slow down the speed of the neutrons and the propagation of the chain reaction.

Further control is obtained by inserting moveable rods of cadmium or other substances able to absorb the neutrons altogether. The activity of a pile may be completely stopped when all the control rods are in, and it can be controlled to a fine degree of accuracy by withdrawing them to the requisite degree. The materials and structure of an atomic pile are such that it cannot possibly explode.

though disastrous overheating is a possibility in the absence of proper control. The radioactive 'fuel' used in standard piles is common uranium (uranium-238) enriched with uranium-235.

An atomic pile is not itself a very large structure, even including the thick layer of graphite which surrounds it to reflect stray neutrons back into the pile. But in order to protect personnel from the lethal rays and particles which it radiates it is wholly enclosed in concrete at least six feet thick. All inlets and outlets have to be adequately shielded, and the working of the pile is managed by remote control. The disposal of radioactive cooling-water is only one of the many subsidiary problems which have had to be solved.

Plutonium and Other Products

The radioactivity is very intense inside a working pile, and the products of the transmutations are multifarious. Among the most valuable of these is the new radioactive element plutonium, which can be extracted from the spent uranium rods and used as fuel in another type of nuclear reactor, or in an atomic bomb. By placing other substances inside a pile large-scale tranamutations can be effected, and many radioactive isotopes of the common elements are in this way being manufactured.

Some of these, such as a radioactive isotope of cobalt, are used in curative surgery instead of the far more expensive radium, and others are now widely marketed for use as 'labelled atoms' in industry and research. For example, a research chemist who wishes to follow the track of phosphorus atoms through several complicated reactions has only to prepare his phosphorus compound from a radioactive isotope of phosphorus. This will exhibit precisely the same chemical properties as ordinary phosphorus, but it will always betray its presence by the rays it discharges. These can be readily detected by a Geiger-Müller counter or similar device.

The 'Geiger Counter'

The rays and particles emitted by radioactive substances can penetrate matter to a degree depending upon their size, energy and electric charge, and upon the nature of the matter. Gamma-rays and neutrons can pass unhindered through astonishing thicknesses of matter, and electrons and protons through less thicknesses. The radiations from radioactive atoms may therefore pass through the walls of their containers into the surrounding air, where they can be counted.

The essential parts of a Geiger-Müller counter are two electrodes connected to a supply of about 1,000 volts. They are enclosed in a tube of gas, but are separated so that no discharge can take place. The state of equilibrium is such that the arrival through the walls of the counter of a single atomic particle will ionize the gas and cause a momentary electrical impulse to pass, and this can be amplified to work a mechanical counter or cause a 'click' in a loudspeaker. Among their manifold uses Geiger-Müller counters are employed to warn workers of dangerous concentrations of rays.

The Hydrogen Bomb

The hydrogen bomb differs radically from the uranium and plutonium bombs, though it is to be noted that all three are 'atom' bombs. Instead of obtaining energy by splitting up heavy atoms into lighter ones, the light atoms of hydrogen are here forced into nuclear combination to create atoms of the heavier element helium.

It is a process of fusion instead of fission, but such fusion cannot be brought about except by enormous heat, and a hydrogen bomb has therefore to be detonated by a fission bomb contained within it. For this reason the hydrogen bomb is sometimes referred to as a 'thermo-nuclear' weapon. No industrial application of such thermo-nuclear reactions seems possible.

14. RADAR

Briefly, radar is the art of locating objects y means of reflected wireless waves. Wireless aves come under the general heading of radio-agnetic waves, in which light waves are also ncluded, and both kinds of wave have a good eal in common. Like light waves, wireless aves travel at a speed of about 186,000 miles second, they are reflected by solid objects, nd they can be focused. Although human yes are not sensitive to radio waves, suitable eceivers can be made to act as artificial 'radio-nsitive eyes.'

In this way, objects can be detected and cated at great distances in darkness or in oud, the main components being a radio nsmitter to illuminate the object with radio aves, and a receiver to detect the reflected nals, or echoes.

The fact that solid objects do reflect wireless es had been shown by the great pioneer, z, before the end of the last century. Later, 922, Marconi suggested, during a lecture in London, that this quality might be put to good use by ships for the location of other vessels obscured by fog or darkness.

By 1925, American research workers at the Carnegie Institute had transmitted signals to the ionized layers of the upper atmosphere, and had received the reflected signals. The most important part of this work was the use of short bursts or pulses of radio transmission. By using separate signals it was possible to measure the time that each pulse needed to reach the ionized layer and be reflected back to Earth. Knowing the speed at which radio waves travel, it was then possible to calculate the height of the layer above the Earth. This pulse system is the essence of radar.

In 1935 the British Air Ministry, in face of the growing danger of war, established a committee to investigate the possibility of detecting and locating aircraft by reflected radio waves. Mr R. A. Watson-Watt (later Sir Robert), who had also made experiments in radio reflection from the upper atmosphere, was called in. Within a few months he had demonstrated a simple form of radar, and by September of that year the Air Ministry was ready to begin building a chain of early warning stations around the coast. Although it was not in fact until about two years later that the work of building these stations was begun, the outbreak of war in 1939 found the British Isles with an established radar warning system unequalled by any other country in the world.

The advantage to a military commander of being able to 'see' the approaching enemy needs no stressing, whether the enemy be in aircraft, ships or tanks. Radar was, in consequence, of critical importance in the Battle of Britain, and in many other battles during the remainder of the war. One special application of radar that deserves mention was the blind bombing device known as H2S, which mapped the ground below on the face of a cathode ray tube in the aircraft, in much the same way as a picture is reproduced on a TV screen.

In peacetime radar has great value to shipping and aircraft. Many ships are now fitted with the kind of aid that Marconi foresaw in 1922, using their radar to avoid collisions in fog, and even to navigate narrow waters and enter harbours in absolute darkness. In airliners radar is used in a similar way, but equally important to civil aviation is the use of ground-based radar sets at aerodromes for 'talk-down' landings. With a radar set the operator on the ground can locate the position of an approaching aircraft and can direct the Captain by radio-telephone until he is low enough to see the runway lights. This system is known as Ground Controlled Approach, or G.C.A.

Guided Missiles

Radar is of great importance in the field of guided missiles. Here it may be used either from the ground, or in the missile itself. In the first place, for example, radar stations on the ground may observe the courses of the target and of the missile respectively, while a computer directs the missile so as to score a hit. Alternatively, the missile itself may carry a miniature radar in its nose, locating the target and steering so as to collide with it. Either of these methods makes possible the hitting of a target in conditions where a gun would be ineffective, whether firing from the ground or from an aeroplane.

Although it is not strictly radar, the closely related technique of location by infra-red rays ought to be mentioned here. These, too, are radio-magnetic waves of a frequency to which human eyes are not sensitive (except insofar as they feel the heat from them). But they can be detected with suitable apparatus. For guided missiles their importance lies in the fact that aircraft driven by jet, rocket, or piston engines all radiate heat. They can therefore give themselves away by their own emissions and there is no need for the transmitter used with radar.

Principles of Radar

Mention has already been made of the import- of pulse transmission in radar. It is this feature which is commonly used to distinguish between radar and radio, on the assumption that radio concerns only continuous wave transmissions. In fact, of course, radar is only a subdivision of radio in the broadest sense.

For direction finding alone, continuous wave transmissions would be quite satisfactory, but where distance has to be measured it is necessary to send out separate short pulses, allowing time for each pulse to return before the next is sent. Since the pulses travel so fast, the times involved in radar measurements are extremely short, and are often measured in microseconds (1 microsecond=one-millionth of a second). A radio pulse will travel about 100 miles in about 500 microseconds. This is the out-and-back distance to a target 50 miles away, so at least 500 microseconds must be allowed between pulses in a radar which is to have a range of 50 miles.

Since it is desired to make measurements with an accuracy of 5 or 10 yards, even over ranges of several hundred miles, the problem of measuring the elapsed time between the emission and the reception of a signal is a very difficult one. The radio pulse takes only one microsecond to travel 330 yards, so that the times to be measured are extremely small. Mechanical methods are not suitable for the measurement of periods of less than a millionth of a second, so electronic means have to be used. Of these the cathode ray tube provides the most familiar example. A single stream of electrons is directed from the cathode to the screen and is swung rapidly from side to side so as to trace a straight line across the tube. This line is known as a time base, for the time taken for the electron stream to sweep from one side to the other is fixed electronically. Received radar signals are fed to the cathode ray tube so as to deflect the electron beam momentarily, so putting a kink in the time base line. Since the transmission of each pulse is keyed to the commencement of the electron beam swing, the distance of this kink across the face of the tube is proportional to the distance travelled by the pulse. It is thus possible to read the range of the target directly from the screen of the cathode ray tube.

For the finding of direction, aerials may be mounted at the ends of a long arm so that a comparison can be made between the phase of reflected signals received at each aerial. The signals will be in phase only when the arm is at right angles to the direction from which the signal is coming. This system was used in the early days of radar, when the wave lengths used were rather long. In 1940 the invention of the magnetron cavity resonator at Birmingham University made possible the use of shorter wave lengths with sufficient transmitting power to achieve the necessary range. These shorter waves are received on an aerial an inch or so in length, on to which they are focused in the manner of light waves by saucer-shaped reflectors. This lessens the problem of direction finding and has eased the development of auto-following radar sets; that is, radars which, when they have once detected a target, concentrate their radiation upon it and automatically track it across the sky.

15. SPACE TRAVEL

The problems of space travel can be considered under the two main headings of survival and gravity. But first it is worth considering the question 'where does space begin?' In fact there is no hard-and-fast limit to the Earth's atmosphere, which simply thins out steadily with increasing altitude. One may say that the atmosphere in relation to the Earth is no thicker than the skin on an apple—even the highest flying airliners move within that shallow layer, not exceeding a height of about 8 miles.

The human problem of survival in space is an intensification of the problem of living in a submarine. An artificial environment has to be provided in a structure which, because it must be lifted from the Earth, must weigh as little as possible. The problems of providing food, air, water and other services for long periods are not beyond solution, but to make a foolproof system requires the expenditure of much time and effort on mechanical and engineering matters. In addition to the requirements already met with in submarines, it is necessary to provide protection against the harmful effects of cosmic rays. Other difficulties will arise from the almost complete absence of gravity, for without gravity liquids will not pour, flames cannot exist and charts cannot be conveniently laid upon a table. Many special methods will have to be adopted to allow quite ordinary activities in the absence of our accustomed gravity.

Rocket Propulsion

On the other hand, it is gravity which makes escape from the Earth so difficult. Indeed, gravity is the greatest single obstacle to sending any object from Earth into space. Since the intention is to go beyond the atmosphere, wings cannot be used and recourse must be had to rocket propulsion, the only form of motive power yet available for use in a vacuum. But a rocket has not only to carry all its own fuel but also the oxygen to burn with it, so that a good deal of energy must be used in the early stages simply in lifting a heavy fuel load off the ground. The addition of more fuel makes more energy available but it also increases the initial weight by reason of the additional tanks required as well as the extra fuel. The practical answer to this is to have a multiple rocket on the pick-a-back principle of giving a small rocket a good start with the aid of a larger one.

Although gravitational attraction diminishes as one goes farther from the earth (at 2,000 miles it is less than half as strong as at the surface) there is no point at which it stops. In consequence there is no possibility of a complete escape from gravity. On the other hand, a rocket which is launched with sufficient speed can master the earth's attraction. This happens when the initial speed is so great that the rocket advances into the weakening gravitational field more quickly than gravity is able to slow it down. The necessary speed is known as the escape velocity, and for the Earth it is about 25,000 miles an hour.

Once this speed has been reached the rocket motor can be shut off and the space ship will 'coast.'

Orbits and 'Space Stations'

For other planets the escape velocity will be greater or less according to their size. The matter of orbits is important to space travel, for voyages between one planet and another are more likely to be made in curving paths than in straight lines. A missile being launched from the Earth already possesses the Earth's speed in relation to the sun, and is therefore balanced against the sun's gravitational attraction. If then it is fired in the same direction that the Earth is already travelling, it will have an increased speed in relation to the sun. Consequently its centrifugal force will be greater and it will move out into a wider orbit. Conversely, if it is fired 'rearwards,' then it will have a slower speed and will drift inwards. The first case would provide the first step in a voyage to Mars, which has a greater orbit than the Earth's, while the second would, for example, be used for going to Venus, which is nearer the sun. Stepping up or down, from one orbit to another, is the most economical way of travelling between planets.

One also sees the importance of orbits in the establishment of 'space stations' or 'artificial satellites,' such as the United States Government's project Vanguard. Here, again, it is the centrifugal force of the body in its circular path that balances the attraction of the Earth. For example, at a height of 350 miles, where the gravitational force is only a little more than 80 per cent. of that at ground level, an orbital speed of 17,000 miles an hour provides the necessary balance. A body in such an orbit would take just over an hour and a half to circle the Earth.

Apart from the artificial satellite projects of America and Russia, the first steps towards space travel had already been taken before 1955 by the pilots of certain American experimental aircraft. They had already reached altitudes where, from the point of view of human survival, conditions are the same as in space. Moreover, these pilots have been able to simulate the condition of 'no-gravity' for short periods of time by flying 'rainbow trajectories'; that is, by flying a hump-backed course. If such a course is made about a radius of 33,000 feet at a speed of 700 miles an hour then the upward acceleration on the pilot exactly balances his weight; in fact he becomes weightless.

The aeroplanes in which these flights have been made were rocket-driven. For, as has already been remarked, the rocket motor is the only form of propulsion so far devised which can be used in what amounts to a vacuum.

Manoeuvres in space will have to be made by the use of minor rocket motors, discharging at appropriate angles to the hull of the space ship. For a landing on an airless planet, such as the moon, it will be necessary to turn the ship round so that it can approach stern first. Here, again, gravity will be the main problem, for the ship will be accelerating down towards the surface under the moon's attraction, and some means must be found to bring it to rest at the moment of contact. The only available method when there is no air is to use the main rocket motors again, adjusting the thrust continuously so as to balance the gravitational attraction for a gentle touch-down. It must be noted that the amount of energy needed to overcome gravity when landing on a planet is equal to the amount needed to escape from that planet. This has a very serious effect upon the rocket fuel requirement; except when a landing is to be made on a planet which has an atmosphere, such as Earth or Mars. Then wings or parachutes may be used as brakes. Although the mechanical problems are made very difficult by the high speed at which the ship will enter the atmosphere (one must avoid being burned up like a meteorite) the use of atmospheric braking is likely to be more economical of weight than the expenditure of rocket fuel.

16. THE CHEMICAL ELEMENTS

The following is a complete list of the known elements from No. 1 (hydrogen) to No. 98 (californium). It is claimed in U.S.A. that Nos. 99 and 100 have now been detected in nuclear experiments. Plutonium (No. 94), which was discovered as a product of artificially induced transmutation, has since been detected in minute traces in certain minerals and is therefore listed as a naturally occurring element. Many substances named in earlier lists (such as didymium, lucium and neo-ytterbium) have since been found to be either identical with, or to consist of mixtures of, known elements. Their names are therefore not included in this list, which contains only the modern standard names (with accepted alternatives).

m.=metal; n.=non-metal; l.=liquid; g.=gas; rad.=radioactive. An asterisk (*) indicates a product of artificial transmutation (not otherwise known).

The name of each element is followed by its chemical symbol and atomic number, its atomic weight being given in brackets. Atomic weights in italics are of single isotopes only.

Actinium, Ac, 89 (227), a rare rad. m.

Aluminium, Al, 13 (26·97), a bluish-white, soft, light m.

Americium, Am, 95 (241), a white rad. m.*

Antimony, Sb, 51 (121·76), a greyish-white m. used in type metal; known also as a black powder.

Argon, A, 18 (39·944), a colourless, inert g. present in the atmosphere; used in electric discharge lamps to produce a blue glow.

Arsenic, As, 33 (74·91), a grey, brittle semi-m. or metalloid.

Astatine, At, 85 (216), a rad. n.*

Azote, see Nitrogen.

Barium, Ba, 56 (137·36), a pale yellow, soft m.

Berkelium, Bk, 97 (243), a rad. m.*

Beryllium (Glucinum), Be, 4 (9·013), a white m., hard as iron but lighter than aluminium; used in alloys.

Bismuth, Bi, 83 (209), a reddish-white, brittle, heavy m. used in alloys.

Boron, B, 5 (10·82), a greenish-brown n.; known also as colourless crystals.

Bromine, Br, 35 (79·916), a dark-red, heavy l. with a pungent odour.

Cadmium, Cd, 48 (112·41), a bluish-white, heavy m. used in alloys and for plating.

Caesium, Cs, 55 (132·91), a rare silver-white, soft, inflammable m., lighter than aluminium.

Calcium, Ca, 20 (40·08), a soft, white m. lighter than aluminium.

Californium, Cf, 98 (244), a rad. m.*

Carbon, C, 6 (12·01), a black, amorphous, hard n.; known also in the crystalline forms of Graphite and Diamond.

Celtium, see Hafnium.

Cerium, Ce, 58 (140·13), a rare, iron-grey, heavy m., whose oxide is used in incandescent gas-mantles; the active element in petrol-lighter 'flints.'

Chlorine, Cl, 17 (35·457), a greenish, heavy g. with a pungent odour.

Chromium, Cr, 24 (52·01), a bluish-white, hard m. used in alloys and for plating.

Columbium (Niobium), Cb, 41 (92·91), rare, hard, grey m.

Copper, Cu, 29 (63·54), a red, soft m., the second best-known conductor of heat and electricity.

Curium, Cm, 96 (242), a rad. m.*

Deuterium, see Hydrogen.

Diplogen, see Hydrogen.

Dysprosium, Dy, 66 (162·46), a very rare, heavy m.

Erbium, Er, 68 (167·2), a very rare m.

Europium, Eu, 63 (152), a very rare m.

Fluorine, F, 9 (19), a pale-yellowish corrosive g. with a pungent odour.

Francium, Fr, 87 (221), a rad. m.*

Gadolinium, Gd, 64 (156·9), a very rare m.

Gallium, Ga, 31 (69·72), a rare, greyish-white, soft m. used in high-temperature thermometers.

Germanium, Ge, 32 (72·6), a rare, greyish-white, crystalline semi-m. or metalloid.

Glucinum, see Beryllium.

Gold, Au, 79 (197·2), a yellow, soft, heavy m.

Hafnium (Celtium), Hf, 72 (178·6), a very rare m.

Helium, He, 2 (4·003), a colourless, inert g. present in the atmosphere; the second lightest element.

Holmium, Ho, 67 (164·94), a very rare m.

Hydrogen, H, 1 (1·008), a colourless, very light, inflammable g.; the lightest element; it is known also in the forms of Deuterium (heavy hydrogen, Diplogen) and Tritium.

Illinium, see Promethium.

Indium, In, 49 (114·76), a rare, silver-white, soft, heavy m.

Iodine, I, 53 (126·92), a grey-black, crystalline n., forming a brown solution in alcohol and vaporizing as a violet g.

Ionium, see Thorium.

Iridium, Ir, 77 (193·1), a white, hard, very heavy m. used in alloys and for fountain-pen nibs and electrical contact points.

Iron, Fe, 26 (55·85), a grey-black, moderately hard m., forming steel when a small proportion of carbon is added to it.

Krypton, Kr, 36 (83·7), a rare, colourless, inert g. present in the atmosphere; used in electric discharge lamps.

Lanthanum, La, 57 (138·92), a rare, grey m. whose carbonate is used in incandescent gas-mantles.

Lead, Pb, 82 (207·21), a grey, soft, heavy m.

Lithium, Li, 3 (6·94), a silver-white, soft, inflammable m., lighter than water and the lightest known solid elementary substance.

Lutecium, Lu, 71 (174·99), a very rare m. (The name is sometimes spelt Lutetium.)

Magnesium, Mg, 12 (24·32), a silver-white, soft, inflammable m., lighter than aluminium.

Manganese, Mn, 25 (54·93), a reddish-grey, hard m. used for toughening steel and bronze.

Mercury, Hg, 80 (200·61), a white, heavy l. m., used in thermometers and (formerly) in silvering mirrors; known also as Quicksilver.

Molybdenum, Mo, 42 (95·95), a greyish-white, heavy m. used in alloys.

Neodymium, Nd, 60 (144·27), a very rare, silver-white m.

Neon, Ne, 10 (20·183), a rare, colourless, inert g. present in the atmosphere; used in electric discharge lamps to produce a red glow.

Neptunium, Np, 93 (239), a silvery-white rad. m.*

Nickel, Ni, 28 (58·69), a silver-white, hard, heavy m.; known also as a black powder; used in alloys and for plating.

Niobium, see Columbium.

Niton, see Radon.

Nitrogen (Azote), N, 7 (14·008), a colourless, odourless, somewhat inert g. constituting about four-fifths of the atmosphere.

Osmium, Os, 76 (190·2), a rare, bluish-white m.; the heaviest known naturally-occurring substance (nearly twice as heavy as lead); used in electric lamp filaments.

Oxygen, O, 8 (16), a colourless, odourless g. constituting about one-fifth of the atmosphere; known also in the triatomic form of Ozone.

Ozone, see Oxygen.

Palladium, Pd, 46 (106·7), a rare, white, heavy m.

Phosphorus, P, 15 (30·98), a waxy-yellow, soft, highly inflammable n., which becomes luminous when exposed to air; also known as a non-luminous red powder.

Platinum, Pt, 78 (195·23), a greyish-white, soft, heavy m.; known also as a black powder.

Plutonium, Pu, 94 (240), a grey, heavy, rad. m.

Polonium, Po, 84 (210), a rare, rad. semi-m. or metalloid.

Potassium, K, 19 (39·096), a white, soft, slightly rad. inflammable m., lighter than water.

Praseodymium, Pr, 59 (140·92), a very rare r

Promethium (Illinium), Pm, 61 (149), a ra m.*

Protoactinium, Pa, 91 (231), a very rare ra m. (The name is sometimes given Protactinium).

Radium, Ra, 88 (226·05), a very rare, silver white, rad. m.

Radon (Niton), Rn, 86 (222), a rare, chemicall inert, highly rad. g. Known formerly Radium Emanation.

Rhenium, Re, 75 (186·31), a very rare m.

Rhodium, Rh, 45 (102·91), a rare, white heavy m. used for plating.

Rubidium, Rb, 37 (85·48), a rare, silvery white, soft m., lighter than aluminium.

Ruthenium, Ru, 44 (101·7), a rare, greyish black, hard, brittle, heavy m.

Samarium, Sm, 62 (150·43), a very rare m.

Scandium, Sc, 21 (45·1), a very rare m.

Selenium, Se, 34 (78·96), a dark grey, crystalline n., whose electrical conductivity is increased by exposure to light; red forms are also known.

Silicon, Si, 14 (28·06), a metallic-looking crystalline n., known also as a brown powder.

Silver, Ag, 47 (107·88), a brilliant white, heavy m.; the best-known conductor of heat and electricity.

Sodium, Na, 11 (22·997), a white, soft, inflammable m., lighter than water.

Strontium, Sr, 38 (87·63), a pale-yellow, soft m., slightly lighter than aluminium.

Sulphur, S, 16 (32·066), a yellow, inflammable, crystalline n., known in several modifications.

Tellurium, Te, 52 (127·61), a silvery-white semi-m. or metalloid.

Terbium, Tb, 65 (159·2), a very rare m.

Thallium, Tl, 81 (204·39), a bluish-white, soft, heavy m.

Thorium (Ionium), Th, 90 (232·12), a rare, grey, heavy, rad. m.

Thulium, Tm, 69 (169·4), a very rare m.

Tin, Sn, 50 (118·7), a silvery-white, soft m. which squeaks when bent; known also in a grey form. Pewter is 95 per cent. tin.

Titanium, Ti, 22 (47·9), a dark-grey, light m. used in alloys.

Tritium, see Hydrogen.

Tungsten (Wolfram), W, 74 (183·92), a grey, hard, heavy m.; used for hardening steel and for electric lamp filaments.

Uranium, U, 92 (238·07), a white, heavy, rad. m.

Vanadium, V, 23 (50·95), a rare, white, hard, light m. used in alloys.

Wolfram, see Tungsten.

Xenon, Xe, 54 (131·3), a rare, colourless, inert g. present in the atmosphere; used in electric discharge lamps.

Ytterbium, Yb, 70 (173·04), a very rare m.

Yttrium, Y, 39 (88·92), a very rare, white, hard, light m.; known also as a greyish-black powder.

Zinc, Zn, 30 (65·38), a bluish-white, soft m.

19. SHIP'S TIME

On board ship time is measured in four-hour 'watches,' counted from noon to noon. The second four-hour period is divided into two halves, each called a dog-watch.

Noon to 4 p.m.	Afternoon watch.
4 to 6 p.m.	First dog-watch.
6 to 8 p.m.	Second or 'Last' dog-watch.
8 p.m. to midnight	First watch.
Midnight to 4 a.m.	Middle watch.
4 to 8 a.m.	Morning watch.
8 a.m. to noon	Forenoon watch.

A bell is rung every half-hour, the number of strokes showing the number of half-hours of the watch or dogwatch that have expired; thus, 1.30 a.m. is "middle watch, three bells."

20. USEFUL TABLES AND FORMULÆ

Mensuration Formulæ and Equivalents

l = length — a = area
w = breadth (width) — d = diameter h = height — r = radius
b = base — c = circumference
π (pi) = 3·14159, or approximately $3\frac{1}{7}$

rectangle, $l \times w$.
parallelogram, $b \times h$.
triangle, $\frac{1}{2}b \times h$.
equilateral triangle, $\frac{1}{4}\sqrt{3} \times b$.
rhombus, $\frac{1}{2}$ product of diagonals.
trapezium, $\frac{1}{2}$ sum of two parallel sides × distance between them.
hexagon, $\frac{3}{2}\sqrt{3} \times b$.
polygon, $\frac{1}{2}$ perimeter × r of inscribed circle.
circle, πr^2 or $\frac{1}{4} c \times d$.
ellipse, $\frac{1}{4}\pi \times l \times w$.
annulus (plane ring), $\frac{\pi}{4}(D^2 - d^2)$, where D = external d, and d = internal d.

cube, l^3.
rectangular solid, $l \times w \times h$.
prism, a of b, $\times h$.
cylinder, $\pi r^2 h$.
pyramid, $\frac{1}{3}a$ of b, $\times h$.
cone, $\frac{1}{3}a$ of b, $\times h$. frustum of pyramid or cone, $\frac{h}{3}(A + \sqrt{Aa} + a)$ where A, a are the areas respectively of the parallel faces.
sphere, $\frac{4}{3}\pi r^3$.
torus (solid ring), $2\pi RA$, where R = the mean r of the ring, A = the a of a cross-section of the material.

rectangular solid, $2 \times a$ of $b + l \times$ perimeter of b.
prism, perimeter of $b \times h + 2 \times a$ of b.
cylinder, $c \times h + 2\pi r^2$.
pyramid, a of $b + \frac{1}{2}$ perimeter of $b \times$ slant h.
cone, a of $b + \frac{1}{2}$ perimeter of $b \times$ slant h.
sphere, $4\pi r^2$.

Circumference of a circle, $2\pi r$ or πd.
ellipse, $\frac{\pi}{2}(l + w)$ approx.

Length in a coil (of belting, etc.).
$\frac{\pi n}{24}(D + d)$, where n = number of turns and parts of turns, D = outside d, and d = inside d.

Thermometer Conversion Rules

On the Fahrenheit scale the freezing-point of water is 32° and the boiling-point 212°.

On the Centigrade scale the freezing-point of water is 0° and the boiling-point 100°.

On the Réaumur scale the freezing-point of water is 0° and the boiling-point 80°.

On the Kelvin or Absolute scale the freezing-point of water is 273° and the boiling-point 373°.

To convert

Centigrade to Fahrenheit: multiply by 9, divide by 5, and add 32.

Fahrenheit to Centigrade: subtract 32, multiply by 5, and divide by 9.

Centigrade to Réaumur: multiply by 4, and divide by 5.

Réaumur to Centigrade: multiply by 5, and divide by 4.

Fahrenheit to Réaumur: subtract 32, multiply by 4, and divide by 9.

Réaumur to Fahrenheit: multiply by 9, divide by 4, and add 32.

Any scale to Kelvin (Absolute): convert to Centigrade, and add 273.

Absolute zero—the coldest possible point—is 491·4° F. below the freezing-point of water, or −459·4° F.; −273° C.; −218·4° R.; and 0° K.

Bodies Falling from Rest

Distance fallen during the first second:
16 feet, or 4·9 metres.

In n seconds a body falls:
$16(2n-1)$ feet, or $4{\cdot}9(2n-1)$ metres.

After falling for n seconds, a body is travelling at a speed of:
$32n$ feet per second, or $9{\cdot}8n$ metres per second.

22. CHARACTERS AND NAMES IN ENGLISH LITERATURE

Abou Ben Adhem, the chief character in the poem of the same title by Leigh Hunt, beginning ' About Ben Adhem (may his tribe increase) ' and containing the line ' Write me as one who loves his fellow men.'

Absolute, Captain, son of Sir Anthony Absolute; under an assumed name of Ensign Beverley, he was suitor for the hand of Lydia Languish, niece of Mrs Malaprop (q.v.), in The Rivals by Richard Brinsley Sheridan.

Acres, Bob, a rival to Captain Absolute (q.v.) in The Rivals.

Adams, Parson Abraham, the learned, sometimes foolish, but always kindly country clergyman in Joseph Andrews by Henry Fielding.

dmirable Crichton, The, in real life James Crichton, a brilliant all-round young man whose story was told by Sir Thomas Urquhart in 1652. The name was also used for another remarkable character in J. M. Barrie's play with the same title.

guecheek, Sir Andrew, the ridiculous country squire in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

ab, Captain, a character in Moby Dick (q.v.) by Herman Melville.

ddin, the owner of a wonderful lamp which, on being rubbed, gave its owner all he wished for. The story belongs to the Arabian Nights' collection.

lard, Sir John, the head of a County family and anxious that the house and family shall be carried on in the future as in the past. His children do not share his views in The End of the House of Alard by Sheila Kaye-Smith.

Ali Baba, the narrator of the story of the Forty Thieves in the Arabian Nights. He discovered the magic of the words ' Open, Sesame ' which gave entrance to the robbers' cave.

Alice, the chief character in Alice's Adventures in Wonderland and Through the Looking Glass by Lewis Carroll.

Alison Lewis, a publisher by profession, but an officer in the Naval Division, interned in Holland, when the story begins; his experiences and his renewed friendship with Julie Quillan, now Grafin von Narwitz, are told in The Fountain by Charles Morgan.

Alleyn, Chief Detective Inspector, of Scotland Yard, is the detective in Death at the Bar, Vintage Murder, Artists in Crime and other mystery novels by Ngaio Marsh.

Allistoun, Captain, in command of the Narcissus, a sailing-ship; he loved his ship and kept his crew up to their task in The Nigger of the Narcissus by Joseph Conrad.

Altamont, Colonel Jack, alias Amory or Armstrong, was Lady Clavering's first husband who became a convict, but escaped, in Pendennis by W. M. Thackeray.

Ambrose, name of a servant in Redgauntlet; of a monk in Ivanhoe; and of Father Ambrose, brother of Sir Halbert Glendinning, in The Abbot, all novels by Sir Walter Scott.

Amelia, wife of Will Booth in Henry Fielding's novel Amelia; an excellent woman, supposed to have been modelled on the author's own wife.

Amory, Blanche, a selfish, rather insipid woman in Pendennis by W. M. Thackeray.

Ancient Mariner, The, an old sailor, who, in The Rime of the Ancient Mariner, a poem by S. T. Coleridge, shoots an albatross. This brings a curse on the ship and all die, except the Mariner who is compelled to travel from land to land.

Andrea del Sarto, the faultless painter in the poem with this title by Robert Browning. The painter reflects on his own shortcomings.

Andrews, Joseph, a footman who marries a maid-servant in Henry Fielding's novel, the full title of which is The History of the Adventures of Joseph Andrews and his Friend Mr Abraham Adams.

Andrews, Pamela, a young maid-servant who repels the advances of the squire in whose service she is; she leaves, and he follows her and finally marries her in Pamela by Samuel Richardson, generally regarded as the first modern English novel of character.

Androcles. The story of Androcles and the lion was originally recorded by Aulus Gellius in the second century. It tells of a slave who took a thorn from a lion's paw and was later recognized by the lion in the arena. To some extent this story forms the basis of the play Androcles and the Lion by G. Bernard Shaw.

Ann Veronica. See Stanley, Ann Veronica.

Anselm, the prior of St Dominic's and confessor of the King in The Fair Maid of Perth by Sir Walter Scott.

Antonio, name given to various characters in Shakespeare's play: (1) the merchant from whom his friend Bassanio borrows money in The Merchant of Venice; (2) the sea captain who saved the life of Sebastian in Twelfth Night; (3) the usurper of the dukedom of Milan, and uncle of Miranda, in The Tempest; (4) father of Proteus in Two Gentlemen of Verona; (5) the brother of Leonate in Much Ado About Nothing.

Antony, Mark, a great Roman whose story Shakespeare told in Antony and Cleopatra. He sacrificed everything for love of Cleopatra (q.v.), Queen of Egypt, and eventually killed himself on the false report of her death.

Apollyon, the evil spirit, whose fierce encounter with Christian is told in The Pilgrim's Progress by John Bunyan.

Aram, Eugene, a schoolmaster of Yorkshire who committed a murder. His story formed the basis of Bulwer Lytton's novel with the name as title; he is also the chief character in Thomas Hood's poem The Dream of Eugene Aram.

Arden, Alice, a dreadful creature, wife of Thomas Arden; she hired two villains, Black Will and Shakebag, to kill her husband. The crime was quickly discovered and the culprits executed. The story, originally recorded in Holinshed's Chronicles, was dramatized and played in London in 1592, the first 'domestic drama' in English literature; though the authorship of The Tragedy of Mr Arden of Feversham is not definitely known, it is believed to have been written by Thomas Kyd.

Arden, Enoch, a shipwrecked sailor who returns after many years' absence to find that his wife is happily married to his friend, Philip Ray. He leaves them, and his sacrifice is told in Tennyson's poem with this title.

Ariel, a spirit of the air released by Prospero to aid him and his daughter, Miranda, when cast ashore on a lonely island, in the romantic drama, The Tempest, by Shakespeare.

Artful Dodger, The, otherwise John Dawkins, a pupil of Fagin's, and a very accomplished thief in Oliver Twist by Charles Dickens.

Arthur, King, probably a British chieftain of the 5th or 6th centuries. His romantic exploits figured in Geoffrey of Monmouth's history and in the stories of Sir Thomas Malory. In more recent times Tennyson wrote his Idylls of the King around King Arthur and his knights of the Round Table.

Ashenden, name of the narrator who tells the story of his war-time adventures and experiences as a Secret Agent in various parts of Europe in Ashenden by W. Somerset Maugham. In Cakes and Ale, by the same author, Willie Ashenden is the narrator of Edward Driffield's life story.

Ashton, Lucy, daughter of Sir William Ashton, is betrothed to another man but is compelled to marry the Laird of Bucklaw in The Bride of Lammermoor by Sir Walter Scott.

Athelny, Thorpe, a hospital patient when Philip Carey meets him; he has held many jobs without any particular success, but is helpful to Carey when his fortunes are at a low ebb. His daughter, Sally, is even more important in Carey's life in Of Human Bondage by Somerset Maugham.

Athos, Porthos and Aramis, The Three Musketeers in the book of that title by the elder Dumas.

Audrey, the country wench, in Shakespeare's As You Like It, who was wooed and won by Touchstone.

Autolycus, a pedlar and 'snapper-up of unconsidered trifles' in Shakespeare's play, The Winter's Tale.

B

Babbitt, George F., a successful estate agent in Zenith, a flourishing American town where both men and machines are standardised. He is the chief character in Babbitt, by Sinclair Lewis, probably the best known of all American novelists outside his own country.

Backbite, Sir Benjamin, a cynical scandal-monger in The School for Scandal, by R. B. Sheridan.

Bagstock, Joe, a retired major who suffers from gout. He plays a part in Dickens's Dombey and Son.

Bailly (or Baillie), Henry, the host of the Tabard Inn in Southwark, where the pilgrims assembled in The Canterbury Tales by Geoffrey Chaucer. It was the host who suggested that each of them should tell a tale on their journey, and it is twenty-three of these stories which Chaucer records.

Baines, Constance, and her sister, Sophia, daughters of a draper in Bursley, one of the 'Five Towns,' are the chief characters in The Old Wives' Tale, by Arnold Bennett. See also Povey, Samuel and Scales, Gerald.

Baker, Mr, mate of the Narcissus; a good sailor who has given the best of a seaman's care to successive ships, but never achieved a command, in The Nigger of the Narcissus by Joseph Conrad.

Balfour, David, the chief character in Kidnapped and its sequel, Catriona, by Robert Louis Stevenson. Balfour is kidnapped by his uncle and put on board ship. After shipwreck, Balfour returns, and eventually recovers his rights.

Balfour of Burley, John, a Scottish Covenanter, and an old friend of the father of Henry Morton of Milnwood, with whose fortunes the story of Old Mortality, by Sir Walter Scott, is mainly concerned.

Ballantrae, The Master of, title of James, the elder son of Lord Durrisdeer. He is believed killed at Culloden, but later returns and is the evil genius of The Master of Ballantrae, by R. L. Stevenson.

Bamforth, Mary, in love with, and loved by, Will Holroyd: their romance is broken abruptly when Mary's brother, Joe, an over-looker at Oldroyd's cloth mill, becomes unwittingly involved in the murder of William Oldroyd, senior, by the Luddites. The story, which begins in 1812 and ends in 1931, records the history of several Yorkshire families in Inheritance by Phyllis Bentley.

23. NOTABLE NAMES IN CLASSICAL MYTHOLOGY

Achates, a friend of Æneas, whose fidelity was so great that Fidus Achates became a proverb.

Achilles, the son of Peleus and Thetis. During his infancy, Thetis plunged him in the Styx, and made every part of his body invulnerable except the heel by which she held him. He became the most famous Grecian hero in the Trojan war, but, quarrelling with Agamemnon about Briseis, he refused to fight in the field until the death of his friend, Patroclus, called him to action again. He slew Hector and dragged his body three times round the walls of Troy. He was ultimately slain by an arrow, aimed by Paris, which wounded him in his vulnerable heel.

Adonis, son of Cinyras by Myrrha, was the favourite of Venus. He was killed by a wild boar while hunting, and Venus changed him into a flower, an anemone. Proserpine is said to have restored him to life on condition that he should spend six months with her and the rest of the year with Venus.

Ægeus, King of Athens. When his son, Theseus, returned to Crete after the death of the Minotaur, he forgot the arrangement made with his father to hoist white sails as a signal of success. Ægeus, seeing the black sails, concluded his son was dead and threw himself from a high rock into the sea, which became known as the Ægean.

Æneas, a Trojan prince, son of Anchises and the goddess Venus. When Troy was in flames, he carried away upon his shoulders his father Anchises, and the statues of his household gods, leading his son Ascanius by the hand, and leaving his wife to follow behind. He retired to Mount Ida where he built a fleet of twenty ships, and set sail in quest of a settlement. After a voyage of seven years he came to the Tiber. His wanderings are told in the Æneid of Virgil.

Æsculapius, son of Apollo by Coronis, was the god of the medical art. He was instructed by Chiron and restored many to life. Pluto complained to Jupiter of this, and Æsculapius was struck with a thunderbolt. Apollo, angry at the death of his son, killed the Cyclopes who made the thunderbolts. Æsculapius married Epione, by whom he had two sons, famed for their skill in medicine, and four daughters, of whom Hygiea, goddess of health, is the most celebrated.

Agamemnon, King of Mycenæ and Argos. During the course of the Trojan war Agamemnon behaved with great valour, but his quarrel with Achilles was fatal to the Greeks. After the capture of Troy, Cassandra prophesied the murder of Agamemnon by Clytemnestra, but, refusing to believe this, he returned to Argos, where, as he was leaving the bath, Clytemnestra and Ægisthus killed him. His death was avenged by his son, Orestes.

Ajax (1) The son of Telamon, King of Salamis, was, next to Achilles, bravest of all the Greeks in the Trojan war. He disputed the claim of Ulysses to the arms of the dead hero, Achilles, and, when they were given to Ulysses, Ajax slew himself. The blood which ran from his wound changed into a flower, the hyacinth. (2) The son of Oileus, and swiftest of the Greeks after Achilles. He was wrecked on his return from Troy, and, boasting when he escaped from the wreck, was drowned by Neptune.

Alcinous, son of Nausithous and Peribœa, was King of Phæacia, and devoted to agriculture. He entertained Ulysses who was shipwrecked on his coast.

Amazons, a nation of warlike women who lived in Asia Minor. Their most famous actions were their expeditions against Priam, and, later, the help they gave him during the Trojan war; also, their invasion of Attica, to punish Theseus, who had carried away Antiope, one of their queens.

Anchises, a son of Capys by Themis, daughter of Ilus. He was so beautiful that Venus came in the form of a nymph to visit him but forbade Anchises ever to mention the favours he had received from her. Anchises forgot the commands of Venus and, boasting of the favours he had received, was blinded by lightning.

Andromache, a daughter of Eetion, King of Thebes, married Hector, son of Priam King of Troy.

Andromeda, a daughter of Cepheus, King of Æthiopia. To appease Neptune, Andromeda was chained to a rock and given up to the monster. Just as the monster was going to devour her, Perseus, returning through the air from the conquest of the Gorgons, saw her and changed the sea-monster into rock by showing him Medusa's head.

Aphrodite, the Greek name of Venus.

Apollo, son of Jupiter and Latona, was born on the island of Delos, which Neptune raised from the bottom of the sea as a refuge for Latona, who was persecuted by Juno. Apollo was the god of light and often identified with the sun. He also presided over the fine arts, music, poetry and eloquence.

Ares, the Greek name for Mars.

Argonautæ, the name given to the companions of Jason who accompanied Jason on the Argo to obtain the golden fleece.

Argus, a son of Arestor, he had 100 eyes, of which only two were asleep at one time. Juno set him to watch Io, whom Jupiter had changed into a heifer. Mercury commanded by Jupiter, slew him by lulling all his eyes asleep with the sound of his lyre. Juno put the eyes of Argus on the tail of Juno's sacred peacock.

Artemis, the Greek name of Diana.

Ascalaphus, a son of Acheron, stationed by Pluto to watch over Proserpine in the Elysian fields.

Atalanta, daughter of Iasus, or Iasius, and Clymene. She was born in Arcadia and was famed as a swift-footed huntress. Determined not to marry, she insisted that her suitors should run a race with her. Many of her lovers perished in the attempt; until Milanion accepted the challenge. As soon as he started on the course he threw, one after the other, the three golden apples from the garden of the Hesperides, which Venus had given him. While Atalanta stopped to pick up the apples which fascinated her, Milanion arrived first at the goal and obtained Atalanta in marriage.

Athena, the Greek name of Minerva.

Atlas, one of the Titans, son of Iapetus and Clymene. He married Pleione, daughter of Oceanus or, according to others, Hesperis. Their seven daughters were known as the Atlantides. Perseus sought his help, but was refused, whereon Perseus showed him Medusa's head and Atlas was instantly changed into a large mountain. This mountain is so high that the ancients believed the heavens rested on its top. This gave rise to the idea that Atlas carried the heavens on his shoulders.

Aurora, daughter of Hyperion and Thia, and goddess of the dawn.

Avernus, a lake near Puteoli. It was supposed to be the entrance to hell.

Bacchus was the son of Jupiter and Semele, the daughter of Cadmus. In his youth he was taken away by mariners whom he changed into dolphins, except the pilot, who had been sympathetic towards him. At the head of an army composed of both men and women, all inspired with divine fury, he marched into the east where the people submitted and elevated to a god the hero who taught them the use of the vine and the cultivation of the soil. To the Greeks he was known as Dionysus.

Bellerophon, a son of Glaucus, King of Corinth, by Eurymede. He fled to the court of Prœtus, King of Argos, whose wife, Antea, fell in love with Bellerophon. Prœtus sent him away to his father-in-law, Iobates, King of Lycia, who sent Bellerophon to conquer a monster called Chimæra. With the aid of the winged horse, Pegasus, he conquered the monster. Afterwards Bellerophon conquered the Amazons, and then destroyed the assassins sent by Iobates to kill him. This enabled him to convince the king that innocence is always protected by the gods.

Bellona, the Roman goddess of war, and sister or companion of Mars.

Boreas, the name of the north wind. He was the son of Astræus and Aurora. He carried away Orithyia to Mount Hæmus in Thrace, and by her had Zetes, Calais and Cleopatra.

Calliope, daughter of Jupiter and Mnemosyne, was one of the Muses. She presided over eloquence and heroic poetry, and was the mother of Orpheus by Apollo.

Carna, a goddess at Rome who protected health.

Cassandra, daughter of Priam and Hecuba. She was loved by Apollo, who promised her the gift of prophecy, but, when she refused his love, the god ordained that no one would believe her prophecies.

Castor and Pollux were twin brothers, sons of Leda, the wife of Tyndareus, King of Sparta. They accompanied Jason in quest of the golden fleece, and also made war against the Athenians to recover their sister Helen. At the feast of Lynceus a battle ensued and Castor killed Lynceus, and was then killed by Idas. Pollux avenged his brother's death by slaying Idas. As Pollux was immortal he entreated Jupiter to restore his brother to life or to be deprived of immortality himself. Jupiter permitted Castor to share the immortality of his brother. Thus, so long as one was upon the earth, the other was in the infernal regions, and they alternately lived and died every day. Castor was celebrated for his skill with horses and Pollux in boxing. Both were regarded as protectors of sailors.

Centaurs, a people of Thessaly, half men and half horses. The most celebrated of the Centaurs were Chiron, Nessus and Pholus.

Charon, son of Erebus and Nox. It was his duty to conduct the souls of the dead in a boat over the rivers Styx and Acheron.

Charybdis. It is supposed that she was an avaricious woman who stole the oxen of Hercules, for which she was struck with thunder by Jupiter and changed into a whirlpool off the coast of Sicily, opposite the rock called Scylla (q.v.).

Chiron, a centaur, half man and half horse, son of Philyra and Saturn. He was famed for his knowledge of music, medicine and shooting. He taught mankind the use of plants and medicinal herbs, and instructed many of the heroes of his age.

Circe, a daughter of Sol and Perse, famed for her knowledge of magic and poisonous herbs. After putting to death her husband, the Prince of Colchis, she was banished to the island of Æea. Ulysses, on his return from the Trojan war, visited the island, and all his companions were changed into swine. Ulysses, fortified against all enchantments by Mercury, demanded the restoration of his companions at the point of the sword. Circe complied and then loaded them with pleasures and honours.

Clio, the first of the Muses, daughter of Jupiter and Mnemosyne. She presided over history.

Clytemnestra, a daughter of Tyndareus, King of Sparta, by Leda. She married Agamemnon, King of Argos. When Agamemnon went to the Trojan war, he left his cousin Ægisthus to take care of his wife and family. Ægisthus betrayed his trust, and when Agamemnon returned he was killed by Clytemnestra. Later, she was herself slain by her son Orestes.

Comus, the god of revelry and feasting.

Dædalus, an Athenian, descended from Arechtheus, King of Athens. He was the most skilful craftsman of his age, but from jealousy slew his sister's son, Talus, who promised to be as skilled as Dædalus. With his son Icarus he fled to Crete where he made a famous labyrinth for Minos, but, owing to a quarrel, Dædalus was ordered to be confined in his own labyrinth. Here he made himself wings with feathers and wax, then fitted them to himself and Icarus. With these they flew away, but Icarus flew too high and the sun melted the wax so that he fell into the sea which became known as the Icarian Sea. Dædalus alighted at Cumæ where he built a temple to Apollo.

Demeter. See Ceres.

Diana, the goddess of hunting. She was the daughter of Jupiter and Latona, and twin sister of Apollo. She was also the goddess of light.

Diomedes, a son of Tydeus and Deipyle, he was king of Argos, and one of the bravest of warriors in the Trojan war. He engaged Hector and Æneas. With Ulysses he went to steal the Palladium from the temple of Minerva at Troy, and assisted in slaying Rhesus, King of Thrace, and carrying away his horses. He even contended with the gods and wounded both Mars and Venus.

Dionysus. See Bacchus.

Dryads, the nymphs of the trees.

Echo, a nymph who was one of Juno's attendants. She was friendly with Jupiter but annoyed him by talking too freely. For this she was deprived of the power of speech by Juno, and only permitted to speak when spoken to. She fell in love with Narcissus, but was despised by him so that she pined away until only her voice was left to perpetuate her name.

Elysium, or the Elysian Fields, a place or island where the souls of heroes and the virtuous dwell after death. Homer's Elysium is a beautiful meadow at the extremity of the earth.

Hamadryads, nymphs who presided over trees, with which they were said to live and die.

Hector, son of King Priam and Hecuba, and husband of Andromache. He was the most valiant of all the Trojan chiefs and won many victories over the Greeks. By killing Patroclus he provoked Achilles to fight again. Achilles pursued him and Hector was slain.

Helen, daughter of Jupiter and Leda, and sister of Castor and Pollux. She was famed for her beauty and in her youth was carried off by Theseus to Attica, but was rescued by her brothers. Among her suitors were the most celebrated princes of her age, but she ultimately became the wife of Menelaus. After some years Paris, son of Priam, came to the court of Menelaus and persuaded Helen to follow him to Troy. This led to the Trojan war, which lasted ten years. After the death of Paris she married his brother Deiphobus, but betrayed him later to Menelaus with whom she returned, remaining with him till his death.

Helicon, a mountain of Bœotia, on the borders of Phocis. It was sacred to the Muses who had a temple there.

Hephæstus, the Greek name for Vulcan.

Hera, the Greek name for Juno.

Hercules, most celebrated hero of antiquity. He was the son of Jupiter and Alcmena. While in his cradle he strangled two serpents which Juno had sent to destroy him. By the will of Jupiter he was subject to power of Eurystheus and obliged to obey him. Hercules at first refused, but Juno rendered him delirious and Hercules slew his own children by Megara. The oracle told him that he must be subservient to the will of Eurystheus, and during twelve years he must perform twelve 'labours.' The first was to kill the lion of Nemea, which Hercules choked to death. The second was to destroy the Lernæan hydra; the next to capture the Arcadian stag, famous for its incredible swiftness; the fourth labour was to bring a wild boar, and the fifth to clean out the Augean stables. For the sixth labour he had to kill the carnivorous birds which ravaged the country near Lake Stymphalis, and for the seventh he captured alive the wild bull of Crete. In the eighth labour he was employed in obtaining the mares of Diomedes, and for the ninth he had to obtain the girdle of the queen of the Amazons. In his tenth labour he killed the monster Geryon and brought to Argos his oxen. The eleventh labour was to obtain some golden apples from the garden of the Hesperides, while the twelfth and last was to bring to earth the many-headed dog Cerberus from the lower world.

Having performed all these labours successfully he was free from service to Eurystheus and returned to Thebes. Being refused by Iole, he eventually married Deianira, and when Nessus, a Centaur, insulted her, Hercules shot him with a poisoned arrow. Later, Hercules marched against Eurytus, father of Iole. Eurytus was killed with three of his sons, and Iole taken prisoner. She found that Hercules still loved her, and she accompanied him to Mount Œta where he was going to raise an altar and offer a sacrifice to Jupiter. He sent to Deianira for his proper tunic, and she, fearing that she was being supplanted by Iole, sent him the tunic which Nessus had given her, and as soon as he put it on the poison penetrated his bones. By the command of Jupiter he was carried to Olympus and became a god.

Narcissus, a beautiful youth, son of the river god, Cephissus. The nymph Echo fell in love with him, but he was so enamoured of his own beauty when he gazed on his image in a pool that he gradually pined away and was changed into the flower that bears his name.

Nemesis, daughter of Nox or Night, and the goddess of vengeance and chastisement. She punished all excess, arrogance and boastfulness, but approved moderation.

Neptune, a god, called Poseidon by the Greeks, a son of Saturn and Rhea, and brother to Jupiter, Pluto and Juno. He shared with his brothers the empire of Saturn and received as his portion the kingdom of the sea.

Nereides, nymphs of the sea, daughters of Nereus and Doris.

Numitor, a son of Procas, King of Alba. Numitor and his brother Amulius became joint rulers, but Amulius expelled Numitor, put his son Lausus to death and consecrated his daughter Sylvia to the service of Vesta. Sylvia, however, bore two children, and, despite the efforts of Amulius, they were preserved and in due time Numitor was restored to his throne by his two grandsons.

Nymphs, were female deities among the ancients. There were sea nymphs known as Oceanides and Nereides; Naiads, who were freshwater nymphs; Dryads and Hamadryads, tree nymphs; and Oreades, mountain nymphs.

Oceanus, a powerful deity of the sea, said to be the son of Uranus and Gæa. He married Tethys and was the father of all river gods and water nymphs.

Œdipus, a son of Laius, King of Thebes, and Jocasta. Laius was warned that he would be killed by his son, and he ordered his wife as soon as his son was born to destroy it. Jocasta gave the child to one of her servants who carried him to a mountain where he was found by a shepherd who brought him up. After many adventures he became king of Thebes and married Jocarta, but discovered later that he was the murderer of his father and husband of his mother. In his grief Œdipus put out his eyes and banished himself to Thebes. Jocasta hanged herself. Œdipus wandered with his daughter Antigone and died at Colonos near Athens.

Oreades, nymphs of the mountains.

Orestes, a son of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra. He avenged his father's murder by slaying his mother, Clytemnestra, and Ægisthus. For this he was haunted by the Furies and he fled from one country to another. Apollo purified him and he was acquitted by the court of the Areopagus. He later returned to Argos and ascended the throne.

Orpheus, a son of Œagrus by the muse Calliope. He received a lyre from Apollo and played upon it so exquisitely that even the rivers ceased to flow, beasts forgot their wildness and mountains were moved to listen to his song. He married Eurydice, but Aristæus became enamoured of her. Eurydice fled from him, and a serpent bit her foot, causing her death. Orpheus resolved to recover her, and with his lyre in his hand he entered Hades. Pluto and Proserpine were moved with pity and consented to restore Eurydice, provided he did not look behind on his journey back to earth. He was nearing the end of his journey when he forgot his promise and turned to look back at his beloved Eurydice. He saw her, but she vanished instantly.

Pallas or Pallas Athene, the Greek name for the goddess Minerva.

Pan, the god of shepherds, huntsmen and all rural people.

Pandora, the first woman on earth. She was made of clay by Vulcan who wished to punish the impiety and artifice of Prometheus by giving him a wife. All the gods gave her presents, and from Jupiter she received a beautiful box which she was to present to the man who married her. She taken by Mercury to Prometheus who sent her away. His brother, Epimetheus, married her, and when he opened the box there issued from it a multitude of evils which dispersed themselves over the earth. Hope alone remained at the bottom of the box.

Parcæ, the goddesses of Fate. They were three in number: Clotho, the youngest, presides over mortals at the moment of birth; Lachesis spins out all the events and actions of our lives; Atropos, the eldest of the three, is dressed in black and cuts the thread of man's existence. They were called Moeræ by the Greeks.

Paris, the son of Priam, King of Troy, and Hecuba. When he was born he was exposed on Mount Ida, but was brought up by a shepherd. He became a great defender of men and flocks and received the name of Alexander. Discovering his origin, he was received by Priam and married Œnone, a nymph of Ida. At the marriage of Peleus and Thetis, the goddess of Discord, who had not been invited, showed her displeasure by throwing among the assembled gods a golden apple on which was written 'For the fairest.' When the contestants had been reduced to three—Juno, Minerva and Venus—Paris was called upon to decide. Juno promised him a kingdom; Minerva, military glory, while Venus offered him the fairest woman in the world. Paris awarded the prize to Venus. She took him to Greece and he persuaded Helen to go away with him. From this arose the Trojan war. Having killed Achilles, and fought other combats, he was himself wounded and was carried to Œnone, but she refused to heal his wound and Paris died. Œnone thereupon ended her own life.

Parnassus, a mountain of Phocis, sacred to the Muses, and to Apollo and Bacchus. It had two peaks.

Pasithea, one of three Graces, also known as Aglaia.

Patroclus, the intimate friend of Achilles, whom he accompanied to the Trojan war. When Achilles refused to fight, he borrowed his armour but was eventually slain by Hector. When his body was brought back to the Greek camp, Achilles forgot his resentment against Agamemnon and went into battle again.

Pegasus, the winged horse which sprang from the blood of Medusa when Perseus cut off her head.

Penelope, daughter of Icarius, and wife of Ulysses, King of Ithaca.

Perseus, a son of Jupiter and Danae, the daughter of Acrisius. Danae and her young son were cast on the island of Seriphos and taken to the king, Polydectes. When Polydectes desired to marry Danae he sent Perseus to bring him the head of Medusa, one of the Gorgons. With Pluto's helmet which made him invisible, and with the aid of other gods and goddesses, he cut off Medusa's head at one blow.

Phœbus, a name given to Apollo.

Pleiades, a name given to seven of the daughters of Atlas by Pleione. Being pursued by Orion they were transformed into doves and after death were placed among the stars and called Pleiades.

Pluto, also known as Hades, where he ruled. To acquire a wife he captured Proserpine, daughter of Ceres, as she gathered flowers.

Plutus, the god of wealth, a son of Iasion by Ceres. The Greeks regarded him as a fickle divinity, and represented him as blind because he distributed riches indiscriminately.

Pluvius, a surname of Jupiter as god of rain.

Pollux, a brother of Castor (q.v.).

Pomona, a Roman nymph who presided over gardens and was the goddess of all fruit trees.

Poseidon, the Greek name for Neptune.

Priam, the last King of Troy, husband of Hecuba and father of Hector, Paris and many other sons. When Troy fell Priam was killed.

Prometheus, a son of Iapetus and Clymene. Despite the enmity of Jupiter he managed to steal fire for the benefit of mankind from heaven. Jupiter sent Pandora (q.v.) to Prometheus, but he suspected trickery and took no notice of Pandora. Jupiter, being angered, ordered Vulcan to carry Prometheus to a rock and tie him there, while an eagle devoured his liver which was continually renewed. He was rescued by Hercules who killed the bird of prey.

Proserpine, a daughter of Jupiter and Ceres, she became Queen of the lower world. She was known to the Greeks as Persephone.

Proteus, a sea deity who had the gift of prophecy from Neptune.

Psyche, a nymph who married Cupid and was carried into a place of bliss. Venus was jealous of her and drove Cupid from her. Psyche was ultimately reunited to Cupid and endowed with immortality.

Pygmalion, a sculptor of the island of Cyprus. He made a beautiful statue and fell in love with it. In answer to his earnest prayers Venus brought the statue to life, and Pygmalion married her.

Remus, the brother of Romulus (q.v.).

Rhadamanthus, son of Jupiter and Europa. He lived such an upright life that on his death he was appointed one of the three judges of Hades, Minos and Æcus being the other two.

Rhea, goddess of the earth, wife of Saturn and mother of Vesta, Ceres, Juno, Pluto, Neptune, etc.

Romulus, twin brother of Remus, sons of Sylvia. They were thrown into the Tiber by Amulius, who had usurped the crown of his brother, Numitor. The boys were rescued by a she-wolf and afterwards brought up by a shepherd. Later they restored their grandfather, Numitor, to his throne, and undertook to build a city. They quarrelled over its position and Remus was killed. Romulus continued his task and founded Rome.

Saturn, a son of Uranus, and known as Cronus by the Greeks. He dethroned his father and ruled over the gods, but was ultimately dethroned by his son Jupiter.

Satyrs, rustic deities, with the legs of goats, short horns and bodies covered with thick hair. They attended upon Bacchus.

Scylla, a daughter of Typhon, loved by Glaucus. She was changed into rock, which continued to bear her name. The rock was opposite the whirlpool of Charybdis (q.v.). Mariners trying to avoid the rock of Scylla were often drawn into the whirlpool of Charybdis.

Silvanus, a rustic deity who presided over trees and forests.

Somnus, son of Nox, was the god of sleep. He was the brother of Death.

Sphinx, a monster with the head of a woman, the body of a dog, the tail of a serpent, the wings of a bird, paws of a lion and a human voice. She devoured all Thebans who failed to answer the riddle she propounded. Œdipus answered it and the Sphinx killed herself when her riddle was answered.

Styx, a daughter of Oceanus and Tethys, she presided over the chief river of the underworld, known by her name.

Tantalus, son of Jupiter, and father of Pelops and Niobe. He became king of Lydia and was admitted to the table of the gods, but abused the privilege by stealing the nectar and ambrosia and giving it to mortals on earth. For this he was punished with a raging thirst and placed in a pool of water, while branches laden with fruit were above his head. These receded from his reach whenever he attempted to taste the water or grasp the fruits.

Telamon, a king of the island of Ægina, son of Æacus and Endeis. He was brother to Peleus and father of Teucer and Ajax. He fled from Megara, his native country, after accidentally killing his brother Phocus. He accompanied Jason to Colchis and was armour-bearer to Hercules. He married Hesione and returned to Greece.

Telemachus, a son of Ulysses and Penelope, who was still in his cradle when his father went to the Trojan war. After the death of his father, Telemachus went to the island of Ææa where he married the daughter of Circe. Some time later, he had the misfortune to kill Circe, and fled to Italy where he founded Clusium.

Terpsichore, one of the Muses. She presided over dancing.

Terra, one of the most ancient deities in mythology. She was the wife of Uranus, and mother of Oceanus, the Titans, Cyclopes and others. She is also called Tellus, and is identified with the Greek Ge or Gæa.

Tethys, the greatest of the sea deities, wife of Oceanus and daughter of Uranus and Terra.

Thalia, one of the Muses. She presided over comedy. The name was also given to one of the Graces, and to one of the Nereides.

Themis, a daughter of Uranus and Terra, and the goddess of law and justice.

Theseus, a king of Athens, and son of Ægeus and Æthra. One of the great legendary heroes of Attica. He was brought up at the house of Pittheus, but was later acknowledged as his son by Ægeus. Even on the journey to Athens he overcame robbers and wild beasts. Later he had many adventures and joined Pirithous in carrying Helen away from Sparta to Athens. He attempted to rescue Prosperine from Hades, but was held prisoner until his liberation by Hercules. Eventually he retired to Scyros where he was treacherously killed.

Thetis, one of the sea deities. She married Peleus and became the mother of Achilles.

Thisbe, a maiden beloved by Pyramus. Their parents opposed them and they arranged to meet at the tomb of Ninus. Thisbe reached the place first, but, seeing a lion, ran away and hid herself, letting fall a garment in her flight. Pyramus saw this when he arrived and thought that she had been slain. In despair, he killed himself. Then Thisbe returned and saw her dead lover she put an end to her own life.

Thule, an island in the most northern parts of the German ocean. On account of its great distance, the ancients gave it the epithet of ultima.

Titans, a race of giants who waged war for ten years against Jupiter. They were eventually conquered and imprisoned in a cavern near Tartarus.

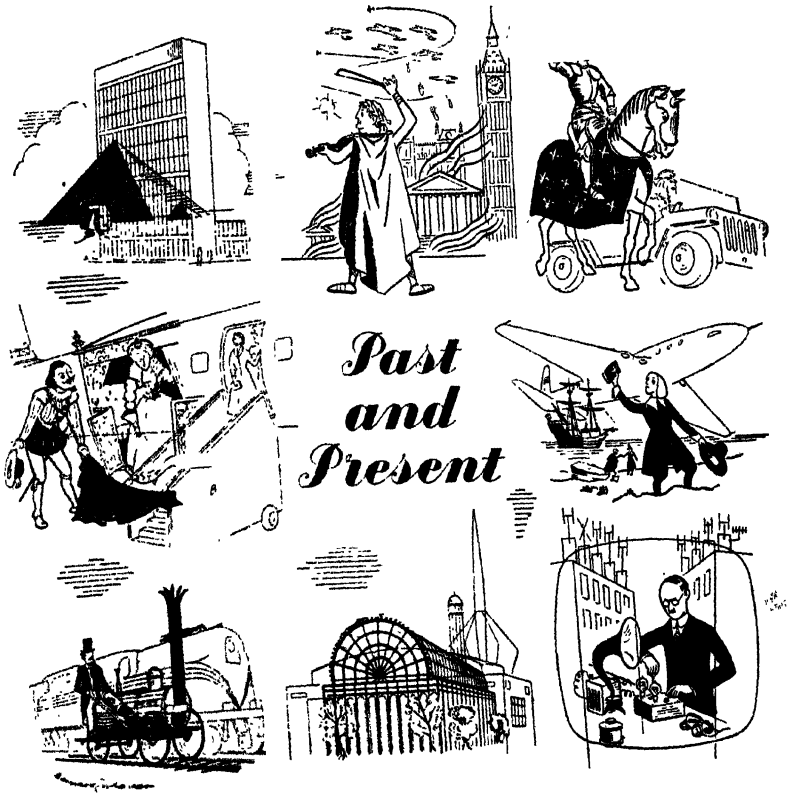
Triton, a son of Neptune, and very powerful among the sea deities. He could calm the seas and abate storms.

Troglodytes, a people of Æthiopia who dwelt in caves.

Ulysses, known to the Greeks as Odysseus, and the hero of Homer's Odyssey, was king of Ithaca. He was husband of Penelope and father of Telemachus. He took a leading part in the Trojan war, and joined Diomedes in stealing the Palladium. After the war he wandered for many years on his homeward journey. After many adventures he returned home after twenty years, and found his wife beset by many suitors. With the aid of Minerva and his son, Telemachus he slew them all and thereafter ruled peacefully in Ithaca till he was accidentally slain.

Uranus, god of the heavens until dethroned by his son, Saturn.

Venus, known to the Greeks as Aphrodite was the goddess of beauty. She was the daughter of Jupiter and Dione, though according to a later legend she rose from the foam of the sea near the island of Cyprus or Cythera. She received the prize for beauty in the judgment of Paris. Vulcan was her husband, and she was the mother of Cupid. Æneas was her son by a mortal, Anchises, and she supported him through the dangers he encountered in Italy and Carthage.



Vertumnus, a Roman deity who presided over the Spring and over orchards.

Vesta, known to the Greeks as Hestia. She was the goddess of the hearth and home.

Vulcan, called Hephæstus by the Greeks, was the god who presided over fire and was the patron of all who work in iron and metal.

Zephyrus, the west wind.

Zeus, the Greek name for Jupiter (q.v.).

From the time when the Romans finally left Britain in A.D. 410 the country was at the mercy of invaders, Saxons, Angles and Jutes, and during the next century and a half the Britons were slowly driven back. By the end of the sixth century Britain could be roughly divided into the following divisions: Northumbria, Mercia, East Anglia, Kent, and Wessex, with the Britons still holding North Wales (Wales), West Wales (Cornwall) and the kingdom of Strathclyde (part of the lowlands of Scotland with Westmorland and Cumberland). With the overthrow of Mercia, Egbert, king of Wessex, became the first real overlord of England. The House of Windsor is in direct descent from the Anglo-Saxon king, Egbert.

33. MAKING A WILL

First Essentials

A Will—a better name is Testament—is a statement of what the maker (the testator) wishes to become of his property when he dies. A Will is effective to make the desired distribution when it has been accepted by the Probate Office as valid ('proved' is the term); and it is accepted as valid when: (i) it is in writing (which includes typewriting); (ii) it is signed at the foot or end by the testator, or by some other person in his presence and by his direction; (iii) the signature is made or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time, who afterwards attest and subscribe the Testament or Codicil in the presence of the testator. The Codicil spoken of is a supplement, altering or adding to the disposition in the Will; for a testator is free to make other dispositions at any time.

Capacity to Make a Will

The testator must be aged twenty-one or over, with this exception: a man or woman on active service or a seaman being at sea can make a valid disposition by word of mouth (see 'Nuncupative' in Glossary), and this though the age reached is only fourteen. And in Scotland, though not in England, a Testament wholly in the writing of the testator and in his or her name is valid without needing witnesses (see 'Holograph' in Glossary).

If you can state, so that there can be no mistake about it, what you intend, and if you carefully observe the directions about signing and having witnesses, no reason whatever exists against your making your own Will.

A Will is Revocable

A Will is revocable until death occurs; a marriage cancels a Will (see 'Husband and Wife'); and a later Will cancels an earlier Will. And when a testator destroys a Will, intending to destroy it, and fails to make another, it is as though he died intestate: the law then makes such a disposition of his property as he would very likely have made himself.

Witnesses

Any person, so long as he or she understands what is being done, is a competent witness to a Will; but it is important to remember this: no witness (or the wife or husband of a witness) can take a benefit under the Will.

Executors and Administrators

The testator usually names in the Will one or more persons whom he trusts to carry out his wishes. They—his Executor or Executrix or Executors—need not be, though usually they are, beneficiaries under the Will. They present the Will to the Principal Probate Registry at Somerset House in the Strand or at one of the several District Registries. When the whole property does not exceed £500 the presentation can be made to a Customs and Excise Office. There is a Probate Form upon which the Executors give an account of the property. The Executor enters into a Bond with two Sureties for the faithful administration of the estate. Whether or not the testator is troubled about the appointment of an Executor, his bank will perform the duty efficiently and at reasonable cost.

When no living Executor is named in the Will, someone interested in the estate (a near relative usually) applies for Letters of Administration: these make the applicant the temporary owner (as the Executor is) of the estate so as to distribute it to those entitled. So, too, when no Will is left: the applicant becomes the Personal Representative of the deceased.

Duty of Personal Representative

The Personal Representative pays out of the estate the funeral expenses and the debts of the deceased; he also pays any death duties (see 'Taxation'); and he then distributes what is left (the 'residual estate') as the testator directed or, in the event of intestacy, as the law indicates. The administration should be completed within a year of the death (the 'executor's year'); but, when the estate is a large and complicated one, or when it is hard to trace intended beneficiaries, a year will not suffice. But reasonable diligence is expected of anyone's Personal Representative.

A person appointed as Executor is not under legal obligation to accept the office even when he has promised the testator to do so. As soon, however, as he intermeddles in the estate, doing what only an Executor has authority to do, he has accepted the office and may not renounce it. If an Executor dies, his own Personal Representative succeeds to the office. An Executor may pay to himself out of the estate his out-of-pocket expenses; but he cannot, unless the Will authorizes it, charge for his services.

The Executor becomes owner of the deceased property at the moment of death, his title being established when he takes out probate. The Administrator becomes owner when grant of administration is made to him, ownership in the interval after the death being with the President of the Probate Court.

Offences in Respect of Wills

Any tampering with a Will is a serious offence, punishable by a maximum of life imprisonment: 'whosoever shall, during the life of the testator or after his death, steal, or for any fraudulent purpose destroy, cancel, obliterate, or conceal, the whole or any part of any will or codicil' is guilty of an offence (Larceny Act, 1861). So, too, is the forgery—the making of a false Will in order that it may be used as genuine—of a Will (Forgery Act, 1913). Your bank manager would keep your Will in safe custody; you may also deposit it in the Principal Probate Registry.

Precautions to Take

No special form is needed in order to make a valid Will; it is enough that it clearly expresses the testator's wishes. It is well, though, to note carefully the means that the law demands to authenticate the Will, the signature and the witnessing. The signature must be at the end: when the Will consists of more than one sheet, it is a safeguard for testator and witnesses to sign each sheet. In strictness only the signatures of the witnesses are needed; but it saves trouble when there is what is called an 'attestation clause' to signify that the formalities required by law have been observed. Such a clause is: 'Signed by the testator, X. Y., in our presence, both being present at the same time, who in the presence of each other and of the testator have subscribed as witnesses our names and addresses.'. If the testator, unable to read or write, makes his mark as his signature, or if, being blind or paralysed, another signs in his presence and by his direction, it is desirable to include this in the attestation clause, 'the Will being first read over to him in our presence when he seemed to understand fully and to approve of it.'

Copy of a Will

As soon as a Will has been accepted as valid by the registrar, it becomes a public document. Anyone may examine it in the Wills Department of Somerset House, paying a fee of one shilling for the privilege; and anyone can obtain a photographic copy of it.

To obtain a copy you write to: The Record Keeper, Principal Probate Registry, Somerset House, London, W.C.2. You give the names of the deceased and, if you can, his address and occupation and the date of death. You enclose a search fee of 1s. 6d.: this covers a search of one year from the death, and 6d. extra for each additional year. You will be told the cost of the copy when the search has been made. If the property of the deceased was in Scotland, the address is: Commissary Clerk, Sheriff Court Buildings, Lawnmarket, Edinburgh, 1; if in Northern Ireland to Principal Probate Registry, Royal Courts of Justice (Ulster), Belfast; if in Eire to Principal Probate Registry, Four Courts, Dublin.

Distribution on Intestacy

The Will that the State (by the Intestates Act, 1952) makes for one intestate gives his property to his surviving relatives in this order of priority: (a) wife or husband (see 'Husband and Wife'); (b) children (or children of such as predeceased the intestate) in equal shares irrespective of age or sex; (c) father and mother; (d) brothers and sisters in equal shares; (e) grandparents. The surviving children of the children, brothers, sisters, uncles and aunts who predeceased the intestate take the share that would have been taken by their parent if alive. The division among them is by stocks (per stirpes) not according to number of individuals.

If no one takes as above, the property goes to the Crown or the Duchy of Lancaster or the Duke of Cornwall.

This applies to England and Wales but not to Scotland.

34. LANDLORD AND TENANT

Statutory Modification of Tenancy Agreements

This is a note upon the relation between the owner of a house and an occupier who has exclusive possession for a while. Formerly the relation arose from a contract, an agreement the terms of which either could enforce; by a series of Acts, Parliament has intervened and in many respects turned contract into status. 'Any contract to the contrary notwithstanding' is now a familiar phrase in statutes dealing with tenancies. The Rent Restriction Acts afford, to a reasonably well-behaved tenant, a security of tenure though he may have agreed to quit after a specified notice; and they give him a right to recover any premium he paid in order to get possession. The Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, gives similar security of tenure to most tenants of houses held on ground lease: they need not leave their homes even though their ground leases have ended.

Rent Restriction Acts

A dearth of houses prompted the first Rent Restriction Act; and subsequent Acts, severely restricting the right of landlords to raise rents or to give notice with a view to sale 'with vacant possession,' have brought most houses in Great Britain under control. Unless the rateable value in 1939 was in London over £100, over £75 in the rest of England and Wales, over £90 in Scotland, rents are controlled, and possession can be obtained only, on specified grounds, by means of an Order issued after hearing landlord and tenant by a County Court Judge. Unfurnished houses only are under the Acts; nor do houses provided by the Local Authorities come under them.

Houses Controlled

Old-controlled houses were built before 2nd April 1919 and had a rateable value (1931) in London up to £35, elsewhere £20. The standard rent of these is that of the 3rd August 1914; and the permitted increases are: 15 per cent., 25 per cent. when the landlord is answerable for all repairs, 8 per cent. on expenditure for fixtures, and any increase in rates paid by the landlord. And, if the tenant has lawfully sub-let part of the house, he may increase the rent of that part by 10 per cent.; and the landlord may take half of that increase.

On a new-controlled house (brought under control in 1939) the landlord can raise rent only for expenditure on improvements or for an increase in rates borne by him. No agreement by a tenant to pay more than the permitted increase of rent is enforceable by the landlord; and, if the tenant does pay, he may at any time within two years recover the amount overpaid. He may do this, in one way, by a deduction from rent due. Nor may a premium in any form be required of a tenant.

Certificate of Disrepair

The tenant, too, may, alleging that the landlord has not fulfilled his obligation to repair, apply to his local Sanitary Inspector for a 'certificate of disrepair'; and, when this is granted, the permitted increases of 15 and 25 per cent. on old-controlled houses are postponed until the repairs indicated by the Inspector are done.

Housing Repairs Act, 1954

Such a certificate also prevents increases of rent under the Housing Repairs and Rents Act, 1954. This Act—'operation rescue' it was called—was to be an incentive to landlords to spend upon repairs so that several million dilapidated houses should not deteriorate into slums. If the landlord spent three times the statutory allowance on repairs, he could raise the rent up to twice the gross value. Owners, however, have made little use of the Act, fearing to lose the 40 per cent. increase and also to invite the Sanitary Inspector's attention to the property. For landlords believe that Local Authorities are enforcing the standard of 'good repair' too rigorously. The Act, by its definition of 'good repair' supports the Local Authorities: the house must be 'in good repair and fit for human habitation'; and 'good repair' includes internal decoration, and 'fit for human habitation' means stability; freedom from damp; natural lighting; ventilation; water supply; drainage and sanitary conveniences; and facilities for storage, preparation and cooking of food.

Distress

No distress for rent overdue can be made in respect of a controlled house unless a County Court Judge gives permission. This distress (see Glossary), 'putting in the bailiffs,' is a means whereby a landlord can get arrears of rent without being obliged to take his tenant to Court. An Act of 1689 gave the distrainer a right to sell the goods unless redeemed within five days (fifteen days when the tenant makes written request and gives security). But some goods—chattels in actual use, wearing apparel, and bedding among them—are exempt from distress. Distress is unlawful if made between sunset and sunrise, or on Sunday.

Rules about Rent

These common law rules about rent are to be noted: (1) before a landlord can enforce a power of re-entry he must, unless there is an agreement to the contrary, make a formal demand upon the premises themselves for the exact amount of rent due; (2) he must do this between sunrise and sunset so that the tenant may count out the money while there is light; (3) unless the tenancy agreement says otherwise, rent is payable at the end of each tenancy period; (4) when a day is appointed for payment, rent is due at the opening of the day and is in arrear at midnight.

'Statutory Tenant'

The security enjoyed by the tenant of a controlled house passes on his death to his widow, if she wishes and if she was living with him at the time of his death. She becomes the 'statutory tenant.' If the tenant leaves no widow, or was a woman, a near relative who has lived in the house for at least six months before the death, becomes the statutory tenant. There can be only one statutory tenant: on the death of that one the tenancy ends. In Northern Ireland, where similar legislation exists, any number of successions is possible.

Order for Possession

The security is not absolute: the landlord may be able to satisfy the County Court Judge that it is reasonable to grant him an Order for Possession. These are the grounds upon which he may do this, even though he cannot show that suitable alternative accommodation is available: (a) the rent is in arrear, or the tenant has broken a condition of his tenancy; (b) the tenant or someone living with him has made himself a nuisance to his neighbours; (c) the tenant gave notice to quit and the landlord contracted to let the house to another, or to sell it; (d) the tenant without the landlord's consent has sub-let the whole house; (e) the house has an off-licence, and the tenant has been convicted of a licensing offence; (f) the house is overcrowded; (g) the tenant occupied the house as a service-tenant, and the service is now ended; (h) the house is reasonably required by the landlord as his own residence, or as that of son or daughter over eighteen, or his father or mother. This last ground does not, however, apply when the landlord has bought the house since 1939.

Furnished Houses: Rent Tribunals
Under the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, Rent Tribunals were set up to fix 'reasonable rents' for furnished houses, such as were let with a substantial amount of furniture and fittings. Either landlord or tenant can make application. This is an example of the working of the Act: in Rex v. Brighton and Area Rent Tribunal (1950) the Lord Chief Justice said, 'Certain of the tenants of Marine Parade Estate, although they had agreed to pay the rents reserved—and I daresay they were extremely glad to get the flats at those rents—considered afterwards that they were paying rather too much; and so they thought they would try their luck at getting the rents reduced.' They succeeded. For the Tribunal, ignoring the fact that the landlord showed a loss, made an average reduction of £50. And the Court could not help the landlord; so long as a Tribunal acts as Parliament directs, none can upset its decisions.

Tenure of Business Premises
Shops and other business premises are outside the control of the Rent Acts. But the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, has given almost complete security to tenants of shops. If the tenant wishes to remain after his lease comes to an end, or when, in a weekly or periodic tenancy, his landlord gives notice to quit, he tells the landlord so.

There must then be a negotiation for a new tenancy and, unless agreement is reached, the Court makes an agreement for them. It will be the County Court Judge when the rateable value of the premises is under £500, otherwise the High Court Judge. In fixing the rent to be paid, the Judge will consider: (1) what is the current market rental for such premises? (2) How much of that rental is due to the goodwill created by the tenant's business or by improvements made by him? The rent fixed is (1) less (2).

Grounds for Order of Possession
Exceptions to the automatic renewal of tenancies are: (1) the tenant has not fulfilled an undertaking made by him to keep in good repair, or has persistently delayed in paying rent; (2) the landlord is able and willing to provide alternative accommodation suitable in all respects (including the requirement to preserve the goodwill); (3) the landlord intends to demolish or reconstruct the whole or a substantial part of the premises; (4) the landlord wants the premises to carry on his own business there (this cannot be urged when the landlord has acquired the premises within five years).

Houses Held on Ground Lease
The Act also protects tenants of houses held on ground lease of over twenty-one years, when these houses are in the same category as those controlled by the Rent Acts. The tenant cannot be made to leave the house except on a Court Order for possession; and the order is given only on narrow grounds. These are similar to those under the Rent Acts with the addition: (1) the house is needed for development; (2) suitable alternative accommodation will be available. In the absence of agreement the terms of the new tenancy are fixed by the Court. The tenant holding over is not faced with a bill for dilapidations; but he will be liable to pay for what are called 'initial repairs,' that is, whatever is necessary to put the house into a reasonable state of repair.

Notice to Quit
The period of a notice to quit is usually fixed in the tenancy agreement, or, when this is silent on the matter, is ascertainable from some circumstance (the due dates for payment of rent, for example). But statutes have intervened: if you have an allotment or an allotment garden, you are entitled, whatever your agreement says, to twelve months' notice, to be given on or before the 5th April or on or after the 29th September (Allotments Act, 1950). The farmer, too, is to have at least twelve months' notice unless he is bankrupt, or unless the landlord wants the land for a non-agricultural purpose that is specified in the agreement (Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948).

Validity of Notice
To be valid the notice must leave the tenant in no doubt: it may state a precise date for leaving, or be 'on or before' a specified date. This latter gives the tenant an option. A notice is properly served: (1) by delivery to the person named; (2) by leaving it at his house with a responsible person; (3) by sending it in a registered letter.

Landlord's Fixtures
The close of a tenancy may raise questions of removing what, at his own expense, the tenant has installed to add to the amenities of the house. Unluckily for the tenant, luckily for the landlord, whatever is fixed in such a manner as prevents its being removed without perceptible disturbance of the soil or the house becomes at once the landlord's property.

You erect a greenhouse on a concrete floor, you instal in place of the obsolete one a modern cooking range, you plant an apple tree and nurture it to maturity: these are fixtures and you are not entitled to take them with you. This does not apply to the carpet fixed on the stairs or anything like that: this remains a movable, personal chattel.

Responsibility for Repairs
Every tenant is under obligation to take responsible care of the landlord's property, to 'use it in a tenantlike manner.'

He does a few odd jobs dictated by prudence, emptying the boiler when he goes away in winter, keeping the chimney clean and so on; and he must not wilfully damage the premises, nor allow another to damage them. This apart, all repairs, interior and exterior, are (apart from an expressed agreement by the tenant) the landlord's legal liability, so far as short-term (weekly or monthly) lettings are concerned.

35. HOUSE PURCHASE

To Buy or Not?

Whether to remain a tenant paying rent to buy a house is a peculiarly difficult decision to make. These points arise:

Price Augmented

(1) The saving in rent is apt to mislead. For the ostensible price of the house is swollen by these items, some inevitable, the others to be avoided only at substantial risk: solicitor's fee, surveyor's fee, stamp duties.

Latent Defects

(2) After you have paid the purchase price and find latent defects—wood-worm in the joists, subsidence in the foundations, or the like—you have no legal remedy against the seller unless he has given you an express warranty. He must not tell you anything untrue; but he is under no legal obligation to disclose defects. Nor is his agent, who will not of his own accord jeopardise his commission.

You are wise, therefore, to make your contract 'subject to survey' and to pay the fee of a competent surveyor. Possibly you have raised part of the price by a Building Society or Local Authority mortgage; and the house has been surveyed by the Mortgagee's surveyor. But he surveys the house to determine whether it is adequate security for the loan; his responsibility is to the lender, not to you. To have your own surveyor is, therefore, wise.

This applies to a completed house. For a house to be built you are entitled to rely upon the builder's expressed or implied warranty, that the house will be well built of good materials and be fit for habitation.

Other Considerations

(3) You, as owner will be liable to Schedule A tax ('see Taxation'). You, too, will bear the burden of repairs. And you will pay rates directly and not in rent. (4) Ownership of a residence restricts freedom of movement: a good job beckons in another place, and you have the problem of selling the house or of letting it; and, under current legislation, in the relation between landlord and tenant, the tenant is by far the better off.

Investigating the Title

If, as is probably desirable though you need not, you ask a solicitor to act for you in the purchase, his fee will depend upon the price of the house: on a £2,000 house not registered under the Land Registration Act, 1925, it is £37, 10s.; on a registered house (where his work will be less, since the certificate of the Land Registry is adequate evidence of ownership) it is £25. For this he first investigates the right of the seller. The seller's solicitor gives him an 'Abstract of Title' (a summary of the documents that give evidence of the seller's power to sell). This will begin by something that took place at least thirty years ago when (by sale or grant or will) the house obtained a new owner. This is the 'Root of Title': the assumption is that, since no counter-claim has been made for thirty years, no counter-claim will ever be made. The remaining documents will trace the devolution of ownership and show how the present seller has acquired it; they will show, too, whether there has arisen, since the Root of Title, any unsatisfied claim (a mortgage not yet redeemed, for instance) upon the house. Being satisfied, your solicitor approves of the conveyance to you and completes the purchase. He will have paid search fees in order to find what charges are due or about to be due upon the house. These and the stamp duty (½ per cent. up to £3,500 purchase price) are the 'disbursements' in his bill.

Leasehold House

When the house is not freehold but leasehold, there will be payable a ground rent (feu-rent it is sometimes called). On a new housing estate this may be a quite substantial annual payment; in most instances it will be small. These important facts are, however, to be carefully noted when considering the buying of a leasehold house: (1) in strictness the house belongs, and will continue to belong, to the ground landlord: however long the term of the lease, you never become the legal owner; (2) when the lease is to expire in a few years, the price of the house should be low, for, even though you may not be obliged to go at the end of the lease, the landlord will be able to charge a greatly enhanced rent (see 'Landlord and Tenant'); (3) if you do have to leave you may have to pay a heavy bill for dilapidations.

Sale of the Freehold

The ground landlord is often willing to sell the freehold (the reversion). The price asked will depend upon (1) the amount of ground rent, (2) the current rate of interest: the higher the rate, the lower the price, (3) the time unexpired of the lease: the longer the time, the lower the price. When the lease has a good many years to run, twenty-five times the ground rent is a reasonable price.

Loan on Mortgage

You may need a loan on mortgage (see Glossary) as a supplement to your own capital: you get that by giving the lender a claim upon your house ('collateral security' it is called) in addition to your undertaking to repay the loan. Probably the Housing Officer of your Local Authority can help: the Housing Act, 1949, gave power to Local Authorities, if they wished, to operate a mortgage scheme. They may, in the present money stringency, be reluctant to use their powers fully; but a talk with the Housing Officer will be fruitful. The Local Council may advance up to 90 per cent. of the value of the house as certified by the Council's Valuer—a value maybe a good deal less than you are asked to pay. Repayment periods are as long as thirty years, and the borrower has a choice of methods of repayment. The scheme is restricted to houses below £3,000 in freehold value.

Building Society Mortgage

A Building Society, the essential function of which is to lend to its members for the building or buying of a house, will require repayment by instalments spread over from five to twenty-five years. The interest charged will not differ much from that of the Local Authority mortgage. Each instalment will include a repayment of part of the loan and an interest payment. You become a member of the society you select by taking up the loan. It is unlikely that you will be able to borrow more than 75 per cent. of the surveyor's valuation.

To borrow on mortgage involves cost besides the interest you pay. You will need to pay the surveyor's fee, £5 or so. And there is a stamp duty of 5s. for every £100 of the loan, and there will be a guinea or two to pay on redemption.

Planning Projects

One of the searches that you or your solicitor will be careful about making is that at the office of the local Planning Office; it would be a disaster to find, after you had completed purchase, that the house was about to be requisitioned to make room for a school or some such purpose. You will also note whether the roads giving access to the house have become public roads repairable by the inhabitants at large. For, if they have not, you and the other frontagers along the roads will be under a contingent liability: you will be required to bear your proportion of the cost of making up the roads. You may, too, see from the deeds presented for your inspection that some limitation is permanently imposed upon the use of the house; and this limitation—this 'restrictive covenant'—may make the house unsuited for your purpose.

Power to Withdraw

If, during these perhaps protracted negotiations and before you sign the formal contract, you find anything you do not like you are quite free to break off and to get a return of a deposit—usually 10 per cent. of the price—that you have made. That is why, at the first, you bargain for the house 'subject to survey,' or 'subject to contract,' or something to that effect. You give yourself time to find out what you wish about the house; you give yourself, too, a chance to change your mind about buying. For you are not obliged to give a reason for breaking off negotiations. You will remember, though, that the use of the cautious phrase leaves the seller, too, untrammelled: he is free to leave off bargaining, free to sell to another.

36. RATES

What are Rates?

Rates are a tax collected by your Local Authority (councils of rural and urban districts, of boroughs and county boroughs) under a power delegated by Parliament. The Local Authority decides what it will raise for its own needs together with what the county council asks by the precept sent to each rating authority in the county. The amount needed is then apportioned: each ratepayer is called upon to pay so much for every pound value of the real property (the land and immovable structures upon it) occupied by him. Movable, personal, property is not taken into account, the old and now erroneous assumption still prevailing—that landed property, the visible local wealth, measures a ratepayer's ability to contribute. But agricultural property is exempt from rates, and industrial and transport undertakings are exempt from three-quarters. Rates, therefore, fall the heaviest upon dwellings, shops, offices and hotels.

Liability to Rates

The assessment of the ratepayer's liability is based upon the rental value of his property; and this assessment was, by the Local Government Act, 1948, committed to the Inland Revenue Officers. But houses are assessed upon the rents they might have had in the summer of 1939, just before a World War was to upset everything, whereas other premises are assessed at present-day values. Householders are thereby relieved at the expense of the occupiers of business premises and the like.

Since the last general valuation was in 1934, the 1956 valuation was bound to be much higher: in the Greater London area the increases varied from 30 to 90 per cent. This did not necessarily mean an increase in payments; for Local Authorities fixed new rates on the reassessment. Householders usually found that a percentage decrease in the rate about equalled the percentage increase in valuation. Shopkeepers did not so find. (In Great Yarmouth a butcher's shop valuation climbed from £26 to £80; in Manchester a large store from £38,300 to £83,330.)

Objections to Assessment

The new rates operated from 1st April 1956, when, too, objections could be raised. You may differ from the valuation officer, expert and experienced though he is, about the assessment upon your own house: he has given a figure absurdly high to the rent that your house could have commanded in that summer of 1939, or comparable houses in the area are lower rated, or he has taken into account what—a movable greenhouse, for instance—could not raise the rent payable by an incoming tenant. And, indeed, the estimate of a market or 'economic' rent admits of doubt; for the council houses with subsidised rents give no guidance, nor do owner-occupied houses where no rent passes, and the rents of controlled houses are no measure of value.

Unless you can bring forward a sound argument, your objection will be futile; but, where any chance exists, you should object. Your success will save more than in rates; for water and electricity charges are in many districts based upon rateable value, and the Schedule A valuation for income tax marches along with it.

Method of Objection

To appeal is easy and need cost nothing. You try to convince the valuation officer; if he admits your argument that the assessment is excessive, the local rating authority will most likely agree. If you fail with the valuation officer or if the rating authority does not agree, you appeal, or the authority appeals, to the local valuation court. This has three independent members with their clerk; the ratepayer is certain of a patient hearing where formality is absent; and no costs are involved. A further appeal is to the Lands Tribunal (see Glossary). There costs will be incurred; but, unless the ratepayer invokes professional help, they will be light. Appeal to the High Court lies on a point of law; but no ratepayer will, when only his own liability and not that of many associated is in question, consider this for a moment.

The point of law will, most often, arise as to the interpretation or application of the statutory measuring rod of gross value. This, enunciated in the Rating and Valuation Act, 1925, is still to be found to determine rateable value (which is this gross value less the statutory repairs deduction). It is: 'the rent reasonably to be expected from year to year, the tenant paying rates, and the landlord paying costs of repairs, insurance, and other expenses needed to keep the premises in a state to command that rent.'

37. HUSBAND AND WIFE

Marriage

The relation of husband and wife results from a marriage ceremony. The essence of every ceremony is a public declaration by a man and a woman (both being over the age of sixteen) that they will be united for life to the exclusion of all others. In England and Wales, but not in Scotland, the parents' consent is required to the marriage of a minor; but, where consent is unreasonably withheld, the Registrar-General or a magistrate may give consent. Unless a special licence has been obtained from the Archbishop of Canterbury (which allows marriage at any convenient place or time) every marriage is to be celebrated with open doors between the hours of eight in the morning and six in the afternoon.

Void Ceremony

A so-called marriage is of no effect (void) if, at any time, either party was married to another who is still living and there has been no divorce: this is so even if one or both of the parties was ignorant of the previous marriage, or believed it had been dissolved by death or otherwise. A so-called marriage is void, also, when the parties are within the prohibited degrees of relationship—by blood lineally, or as brother and sister, uncle and niece, aunt and nephew.

Rights and Duties

These rights and duties arise out of marriage: a duty to cohabit (which does not necessarily include sexual intercourse) unless there has been a separation (either by mutual agreement or by a magistrate's order); a duty upon the husband to maintain his wife according to his estate and condition (but the wife is under no liability to maintain her husband); a duty upon the husband to maintain his wife's children. It is for the husband to determine where the matrimonial home shall be and what shall be the standard of living there.

When husband and wife are cohabiting, any savings made by the wife out of money given for household expenses or for maintenance, belong to the husband; and, for the purposes of liability to income tax, the income of a married woman living with her husband is deemed to the income of the husband.

Dissolution

A marriage may be dissolved by a decision of the High Court, and each party be freed to marry again though in the lifetime of the other. The dissolution is at first conditioned (decree nisi); it is made complete (decree absolute) when during an interval of six weeks the Queen's Proctor sees no reason why it should be cancelled. A petition for divorce may not be presented until the lapse of three years from the date of marriage unless (on the ground of exceptional hardship suffered by the petitioner or of exceptional depravity on the part of the respondent) a High Court Judge gives leave.

Grounds for Divorce

These are the four grounds upon one or more of which a petition for divorce may be presented, either by husband or wife:

(i) the respondent has, since the celebration of the marriage, committed adultery;
(ii) the respondent has deserted the petitioner without cause for a period of at least three years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition;
(iii) the respondent has, since the celebration of the marriage, treated the petitioner with cruelty;
(iv) the respondent is incurably of unsound mind and has been continuously under care and treatment for a period of five years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition; and
(v) a petition for divorce may be presented by a wife on the ground that her husband has, since the celebration of the marriage, been guilty of rape, sodomy or bestiality.

These facts are to be noted in respect of the grounds for divorce: (a) when a wife has obtained a separation order, she cannot treat the subsequent absence of her husband as desertion; (b) the 'cruelty' constituting a ground is such conduct as causes danger to life, or limb, or health (bodily or mental).

Bars to a Petition
Bars to a divorce are: the petitioner has connived at the adultery complained of; the petitioner has condoned the adultery complained of; there has been collusion (see Glossary for these terms). And a judge, in his unfettered discretion, may refuse a decree when the petitioner has been guilty of adultery, or of unreasonable delay, or of cruelty to the other party, or of such conduct as led to the respondent's adultery.

The right of divorced persons to marry is subject to this restriction: a man may not, during his divorced wife's lifetime, marry her sister or half-sister; nor a woman, during her divorced husband's lifetime, marry his brother or half-brother.

Alimony and Maintenance
A wife may, pending a suit, apply for alimony; and the Court will usually allow her one-fifth of the joint incomes. When a decree has been made the Court orders permanent maintenance of the wife, usually about one-third of the joint incomes. The order may be made in favour of the wife (usually dum sola et casta, while single and not in adultery) even when she is the guilty party.

Guardianship of Children
Husband and wife have equal rights to the guardianship of their children under age and unmarried. When, as the result of a divorce or of a judicial separation, a question arises concerning the custody of the children, the Court decides the question. The decision will be based upon what the Court, after hearing both parties, judges to be best for the welfare of the child, or children; and, in accordance with this paramount consideration, custody may on occasion be decreed to the guilty party. The Court has power, too, under the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, when such a course is for the benefit of the child, to commit the control and custody of the child to a person other than its parent. And, in the event of a divorce or judicial separation, the Court will in suitable instances place the children of the marriage under the protection of the Lord Chancellor.

The law will not compel a child that has reached years of discretion, unless its own welfare requires it, to return to its parent against its wishes; and it has been laid down that a boy has reached years of discretion at fourteen, a girl at sixteen.

Husband and wife have equal right in determining the religion in which the child shall be brought up. Any agreement whereby either gives up such a right is of no effect. When husband and wife are at variance in respect of the religion, each has the right to apply to the Court for decision.

Property Rights
A wife has full power to acquire and to dispose, by Will or otherwise, of property (see, however, 'Paraphernalia,' in Glossary). Such property as is bought jointly with her husband belongs to her in proportion to the contribution that she made towards its cost.

A wife living with her husband is entitled (unless her husband has supplied the necessaries or the money to buy them, or has forbidden his wife to do so) to pledge her husband's credit for necessaries suitable to the manner in which the household is maintained. Under the Family Allowance Act, 1945, it is provided that family allowances shall belong to the wife. A Magistrates' Court, however, being satisfied that the wife is not a proper recipient, may order payment to the husband. And a wife living apart from her husband is entitled (unless he has provided an adequate maintenance) to pledge his credit for necessaries supplied for the use of herself and their children living with her: adultery by the wife destroys this right.

Revocation of Will
A marriage operates to cancel a Will, whether of husband or of wife, made before the marriage: the law assumes that the testator must have intended to make fresh dispositions in his or her altered status. (The revocation does not apply to a Will when it is expressed to be made in contemplation of a specified marriage, and that marriage takes place.)

Widow's Portion
Unless a Will is made after marriage, or unless a Will in contemplation of the marriage exists, the property of a husband or wife is, upon a death, distributed as on an intestacy. More often than not a wife whose husband dies intestate is better off than she would be if he had made a Will subsequent to the marriage. For she takes in most instances the whole of what the husband leaves; and, even when the estate is large, the widow's portion is generous.

(a) If there are no children, no parent and no brother or sister (or their children) surviving the husband, the widow takes everything.

(b) If there are children, the widow takes: (i) all the personal chattels (see Glossary), (ii) a net sum of five thousand pounds, free of death duties and costs, with interest at 4 per cent. from the date of death; (iii) a life-interest in half the remainder, the other half being for the children.

(c) If there are no children but other next-of-kin, the five thousand is replaced by twenty thousand.

The same rules apply to a wife's estate when she dies intestate, her husband surviving.

The Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938, gives power to a widow, when her late husband's Will makes no reasonable provision for her, to apply to the Court for a revision of the Will; and, in deserving cases, the Court directs provision to be made.

Presumption of Coercion
The former presumption of law, that a wife who committed an offence in the presence of her husband did so under coercion, was repealed by the Criminal Justice Act, 1925; but the Act provides that, on a charge against a wife for any offence except treason or murder, when the Court is satisfied that in fact the offence was committed in the presence of and under the coercion of the husband, the wife cannot be punished.

Evidence in Criminal Cases

Under the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, the husband or wife of a person charged with an offence is a competent witness; but, except as below, the wife or husband of a person charged cannot be called as witness unless the prisoner wishes it. In certain charges under the Offences Against the Person Act, 1861, and in charges against husband or wife for stealing the property of the spouse, the wife or husband of the person charged may be called, either for the prosecution or defence, without the consent of the person charged.

Separation and Maintenance Acts

These Acts give to a wife a cheap and speedy remedy for certain offences by her husband. These offences are: (i) her husband has been convicted of an aggravated assault (see Glossary) upon her; (ii) her husband has been convicted upon indictment of an assault upon her, and sentenced to pay a fine of more than £5, or to a term of imprisonment exceeding two months; (iii) her husband has deserted her ('desertion' in this connection implies an intention by the husband to end cohabitation with his wife and the absence of consent by the wife to the ending); (iv) the husband has been guilty of persistent cruelty to her or wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for her or her infant children; (v) her husband is a habitual drunkard (a 'habitual drunkard' is a man who, by reason of intemperate drinking of intoxicating liquor, or of the use of drugs, is at times dangerous to himself or others, or incapable of managing his affairs); (vi) her husband has been guilty of persistent cruelty to her children; (vii) her husband knowing he was suffering from a venereal disease insisted on having sexual intercourse with her; (viii) her husband has compelled her to submit herself to prostitution.

Domestic Proceedings

The wife applies for an order to a Magistrates' Court; and her application is considered in accordance with the rules laid down for 'domestic proceedings,' such proceedings as affect family life. The Court consists of not more than three justices, one if possible a woman; the proceedings are separate from other business; there is a restriction upon persons entitled to be present; and newspaper reports are confined to essentials. The wish is to lessen embarrassment and to encourage reconcilement.

Court Orders

The Court has power to make any or all of these orders: (i) that the wife shall no longer be bound to cohabit with the husband; (ii) that the children of the marriage shall, till they reach the age of sixteen, be in the custody of the wife; (iii) that the husband shall pay to the wife (or to an officer of the Court for her) such a weekly sum not exceeding £5 and a weekly sum not exceeding 30s. for each child in her custody as the Court thinks reasonable. The Court will, in deciding what is reasonable, take into account the means of both husband and wife. The payments are without deduction of income tax.

The Court may, on the application of either wife or husband, vary or discharge an order; and the Court may, when it is for the benefit of a child that education shall continue after the age of sixteen, order the child's maintenance to continue, but not beyond twenty-one.

Name of Wife

The assumption and use by a wife of her husband's surname is convention only: no legal obligation is upon her. She may, if she chooses, retain her maiden surname, either for all purposes or for some particular purposes.

On a dissolution of marriage a woman is free to retain the name she used during marriage.

38. RIGHTS AND WRONGS

The rights considered here are such as our law recognizes; the wrongs (which the law calls torts) are the invasions of those rights, invasions for which the law awards damages. The law is capricious in its recognition of rights. It does not, for instance, recognize a right of privacy: you have a copyright in the letter you write, in the diary you keep; you can prevent any unwarranted dealing with these. But you have no copyright in your appearance or in the personality that your letters and diary reveal; and when these have Press value you may find, to your dismay perhaps, that you are a public character.

Private Nuisance

The law adopts this attitude: each has a right to use his property, each a right to carry on his lawful activities; but he must not encroach upon his neighbour's property nor, by culpable negligence, injure that neighbour in person or property. We are to tolerate one another. One wrong, for instance, is a private nuisance, an interference (by the escape of noise, or smoke, or stench) by occupiers of property with the enjoyment of neighbouring property. But, to be a nuisance for which a successful action can be brought, the interference must be more than trivial, more than transitory. If your annoyances come from your neighbour's reasonable uses of his land you must tolerate them. He builds so that your pleasant outlook is gone; he opens up windows overlooking your garden; he grows trees that lessen the light and the warmth received by that garden. These activities are not nuisances.

But the right to grow his trees does not include a right to let them encroach into your garden or into the space over your garden. When intruding roots or branches do measurable damage, you have a valid claim for compensation. You can also ask for an order, that the owner of the tree shall take steps to prevent the intrusion.

Intrusion of Trees

The occupier of land has also a right to abate a nuisance affecting his land. The owner of a tree, therefore, is obliged to reconcile himself to the possibility that his neighbour may cut back to his boundary the overhanging branches and intruding roots. He may do this though the cutting damages or disfigures the tree; he may do it whether or not he gives notice of his intention. The law was put thus in the leading case: 'The owner of a tree has no right to prevent a person, lawfully in possession of land into or over which its roots or branches have grown from cutting away so much as projects into or over his land; and the owner of the tree is not entitled to notice unless his land is entered to effect that cutting.' But you have no right to use the cut branches or their fruit; these still belong to the owner of the tree.

The Right to Light

The bringing of an action for nuisance runs more than the ordinary hazards of litigation; for no precise line is between what is and what is not a nuisance. An owner has a right to erect buildings on his land; and these buildings are bound to lessen the light falling upon his neighbour's land. He need not bother about the darkening of a neighbour's garden; for English law recognizes no right to receive light upon open ground. It is only to windows that such a right is annexed, and only to windows that have enjoyed the light over a period of twenty years or more: these are 'ancient lights,' an obscuration that is substantial is a nuisance. You can prevent building on adjacent land when, having acquired 'ancient lights'; the building will make your home a good deal less comfortable and enjoyable. And the Court may take a view differing from yours.

The Right to Security

The law is rigorous to protect a person, from bodily harm or the fear of it, from unjustified restraint, from loss of a deserved reputation. Infringements of personal rights are assault and battery, false imprisonment, and defamation of character. There is an assault when a person threatens another, without the other's consent, in such a way as to raise fear of bodily harm. The assault becomes battery when blows are struck. A person may justify both in these ways: his acts were in self-defence or in defence of one (his wife or child or other) to whom he owed a duty; he was ejecting a trespasser, using in the process no more force than was necessary; he was merely protecting his goods from seizure by the complainant; he was preventing the committing of a crime.

False Imprisonment

There is a false imprisonment when, without legal justification, the least restraint has been placed upon a person's freedom of movement; there need be no actual physical restraint. Thus, a constable may arrest without warrant where there is a reasonable charge of felony; but he is liable to pay damages when, on a frivolous or untenable charge, he asks a person to come before a magistrate. But the same right to punish that would justify a beating justifies an imprisonment: this was adjudged in one case 'The keeping-in of pupils for a short time after school has closed, as a penalty for some shortcoming, is one of the recognized methods of enforcing discipline in schools. It is a mild method and inflicts no disgrace upon the pupil. However mistaken a teacher may be as to the justice of imposing such a penalty in any particular case, it is not a false imprisonment, unless imposed for malicious motives.'

Loss of Consortium

The law also protects the right of a wife to the society and comfort of her husband, and the right of a husband to the society and comfort of his wife. One who, without legal excuse, entices wife or husband away so that there is a loss of consortium is liable to the injured spouse.

Defamation of Character

The defamation of a person's character by way of spoken words (slander, that is) gives the plaintiff a right to compensation only when the defamation is of certain gross kinds, or when special damage is proved. The gross kinds are: the imputing of a criminal offence, the imputing of loathsome disease, the imputing of what affects a man's calling, the imputing of unchastity to a woman. In these the law presumes damage because of the mischievous tendency of the slander. The special damage, the actual harm to be proved, is the loss of some definite material advantage, the voluntary hospitality of friends, for instance. If the defendant proves the truth of the statement, as also in libel, he cannot be made liable for damages; for he has not harmed a deserved reputation.

Libel

Defamation by way of a less fleeting thing than spoken words (libel, that is) being published to others than the plaintiff, is actionable without proof of actual loss. Some defamatory statements, however, are privileged; and these, though untrue, impose no legal liability upon their makers. A statement in debate in Parliament, a statement in judicial proceedings, a statement in a paper ordered by Parliament to be published, a fair and accurate newspaper report of judicial proceedings: these have absolute privilege and, even when prompted by wrong motives, they are not actionable.

Privileged Statements

Defamatory statements that are privileged, but which lose their privilege when it is shown that a wrong motive (malice) prompted them are: fair and accurate newspaper reports of public proceedings, a statement made by a person who has a moral duty to make it to the person to whom he does and the person who receives it has an interest in hearing it. (Thus, an employer's opinion of his employee expressed to a prospective employer in answer to his inquiries is privileged when it is a real opinion.) It is the judge that decides whether an occasion is privileged.

It is to be noted that you may libel without intending to do so: you may write an imaginary account, bringing a character into contempt or dislike, and some people may attach your account to a real person. Liability for libel does not depend on the intention of the defamer but on the fact of defamation.

Trespass

You have a legal right to require your neighbours to abstain from trespass upon your property;. and a trespass is an unauthorized interference with it. Entry upon your land, even though unfenced (for there is no legal obligation to fence), without your sanction is a trespass. And trespass may be by farm animals—horse or cow or sheep, though not by cat or dog.

A Licence Abused

A permission to enter upon another's land—a licence it is called—is abused when employed for a purpose not intended. Then, too, the entry is a trespass: a man may be a trespasser upon the highway, the purpose of which is passage. The man who, being on the public path over the moors, used his umbrella to scare game from the shooting butts, and the man who walked the road over Newmarket Heath to note horses in training, were trespassers.

When a trespasser, being challenged by an occupier, proffers amends—a shilling, perhaps—for the damage he has done, and says that he makes no claim to the land on which he has, without intending to, trespassed, then the occupier cannot bring successful action.

The owner of a cat incurs no liability for harm caused by its trespass. The owner of a dog is liable only for harm done by the dog to farm animals, including poultry. The farmer, however, is liable for whatever damage his trespassing animals do, even though no lack of care on his part can be shown.

Negligence

You have a right to require that your neighbours, in their activities that may affect you, shall act with care. Failure to fulfil the duty of care is the wrong of negligence. Thus, for the convenience of mankind in carrying on the affairs of life, users of the roads are expected to put up with such mischief as reasonable care on the part of others cannot avoid. But, when the mischief comes through lack of care, the care owed to the injured one, liability rests upon the negligent one.

No Obligation to Fence

The owner of a field abutting on the highway is under no legal obligation to users of the highway so to keep his hedges and gates as to prevent his animals (not known to be dangerous) from straying on to the highway. But, if such an owner puts an animal known to him to have dangerous propensities, in a field where it is liable to stray, he does owe a duty to users of the highway: he is liable to an injured person, even though he shows that he took precautions to prevent the straying.

Proof of Negligence

The degree of care that will be a defence against a claim for negligence is that which a man of ordinary prudence and ability would have shown. He that claims must show two things: that the defendant owed a duty of care towards him, and that the defendant's failure to fulfil the duty caused his loss. At times, however, the accident itself implies negligence: res ipsa loquiter (the thing speaks for itself) is the phrase. Thus, where a barrel of flour rolled out of a warehouse and injured passer-by on the highway, there was no need for the claimant to bring evidence of negligence.

Fraud

Fraud (deceit, that is) is another wrong the sufferer from which has a remedy at law. Fraud is established when these facts are shown: (1) there was a statement (or an implication) of what was known to the defendant as false; (2) the defendant intended it to be acted upon by the plaintiff, and the plaintiff did act upon it, and has sustained loss by so doing. Moreover, conduct designed to deceive is (in law as in morals) equivalent to a false statement in words. It was adjudged fraud to obtain goods on credit in Oxford by wearing without right undergraduate cap and gown.

General Liability

Two final statements about legal rights are to be noted well. One is this. There exists a widespread opinion that, when without any fault of his own a person suffers loss or is injured, someone or other is legally bound to compensate him. It is not so: unless a good reason makes it just to remove the loss from the shoulders of the sufferer on to another's shoulders, the loss lies where it has fallen. A customer trips on the stairs injuring herself: unless she can prove that a concealed danger in the stairs caused her accident, she has no valid claim against the shopkeeper.

The second note is: our law no longer requires a man to act at his peril and be liable for all the consequences of his acts. The rule now is that a man's freedom of action is subject only to the obligation not to infringe any duty of care which he owes to others.

39. GLOSSARY OF LEGAL TERMS

Abatement (of Nuisance): right of one to remove what prevents his enjoyment, to which he is entitled, of benefits from land, as the right of commoners to remove buildings illegally placed upon commons, or the right to break down an impediment to a right of way.

Abstract of Title: summary or epitome of the evidence of ownership, given by the seller to facilitate investigation of his right to sell.

Accommodation Bill: bill of exchange not arising from an actual business transaction but created with the object of raising money, the accommodation party placing his signature on the bill in order to facilitate borrowing.

Accord and Satisfaction: agreement by a party entitled to sue another for breach of contract to accept some act in satisfaction of his claim, which act being performed the right of action is discharged.

Accumulation (Rule Against): rule prohibiting the accumulation of the profits of any property beyond the period of the life of the grantor, or twenty-one years from the death of the grantor, or the minority of any person living at the death of the grantor (see Perpetuities).

Ademption: revocation of a grant or bequest; thus, a specific legacy is revoked if at the testator's death it had ceased to belong to the testator, or could not be identified from the description in the Will.

Adverse Possession: occupation of land in such a manner as denies any claim to ownership except the occupier's; such adverse possession continued over twelve years turns a trespasser into an absolute owner.

Advowson: right to appoint a qualified person to an ecclesiastical benefice; power of patronage.

Affidavit ('he has stated on his oath'): written statement sworn to by its maker and, when he thinks fit, accepted by the judge as evidence.

Affirmation: right of a person who objects to being required to take an oath before giving evidence to make this declaration, 'I, A. B., do solemnly, and sincerely, and truly declare and affirm.'

Agent: one invested with the authority of another (the Principal) whereby he makes that other liable for contracts made in his name.

Aggravated Assault: an assault more serious than a common assault or beating in that it is accompanied by exceptional violence or other blameworthy factor.

Aiders and Abettors: persons who help or advise or induce others to commit a crime and who may be tried and punished for the crime itself.

Alien: one who, not being a British subject, cannot own a share in a British ship, and who, being in an enemy country, has no standing in any British court of law.

Ambulatory: unfixed, mutable, liable to change—applied to a Will in that it does not become irrevocable until the death of the testator.

Articles of Association: terms under which the business of a company is to be conducted, the company itself having power to modify the terms.

Attorney-General: the chief law minister of the Crown; he and his colleague, the Solicitor-General, are the heads of the Bar during their holding of office. He controls criminal proceedings and may, by entering a nolle prosequi, put an end to such proceeding.

Autrefois acquit; Autrefois convict: defence available to one that is put in peril once again for substantially the same offence: the question is res judicata (a matter already disposed of by trial) and is not again to be raised.

Bail: person who undertakes, subject to a forfeiture of a stated sum if he fails, to assure the presenting for trial of another person accused; also applied to the custody of one liable to be kept in prison till his trial.

Bailment: the lawful possession of another's goods, for safe custody, for carriage, for use on loan, and so on; the owner is the Bailor, the temporary possessor is the Bailee.

Barrister: lawyer that, having dined over a period in an Inn of Court and having passed the examinations of the Council of Legal Education, has been called to the Bar by the Benchers of his Inn: he thereby has a right of advocacy before all Courts.

Bill of Exchange: unconditional order in writing addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it and requiring the person to whom it is addressed to pay on demand, or at a definite future time, a sum of money to or to the order of a specified person, or to bearer.

Bill of Lading: receipt for goods, given by the master of the vessel to the consignor and undertaking to make safe delivery to the consignee; the B/L is a document of title enabling goods to be dealt with while in transit over sea.

Bill of Sale: document whereby movable goods are made security for a loan, the document being an authority to take the specified goods on default; it is parallel to a Mortgage on land.

Bona vacantia: goods without an ascertainable owner and going to the Crown or to the Duchy of Lancaster or to the Duke of Cornwall (see section on Wills).

Bye-law: law enacted by a Local Authority or other body in accordance with a power delegated by Parliament, which law, being approved by the appropriate Minister, has the full force of law.

Case Stated: removal, upon complaint, of a conviction or order from a Magistrates' Court to the Queen's Bench Court so that the matter may be reviewed; the magistrates are required to 'state their case.'

Casting Vote: additional vote to turn the balance, at times (as in the Articles of most companies) given to a chairman. The chairman has not, apart from a specific investing, a casting vote: when the magistrates are equally divided in respect of an accusation, the accused should be discharged.

Caveat emptor (the buyer must take care): rule whereby, unless the seller has in one way or another assumed responsibility for the goods sold, the buyer takes the goods as they are.

Certiorari: command issued by a superior Court to an inferior Court, upon complaint that justice has not been done in the inferior Court, to bring its record for examination: the writ begins 'We, being desirous for certain reasons, that the said record should by you be certified to us.' (Certiorari, Latin for 'to be certified.')

Cestui que trust: he or she for whose benefit a trust is created, in full cestui a que use le trust est creé (see Trust); a beneficiary of the trust.

Champerty: help rendered to a litigant by one not immediately concerned in the dispute on the understanding that the helper, in the event of success, shall share in what is won.

Charity: relief of poverty, advancement of education or religion, or any other purpose deemed to be for the benefit of the community generally; a gift to such a charity is not invalid even though it involves mortmain.

Charter Party: written agreement between the owner of a ship and a merchant for the hire of the ship and safe delivery of its cargo. (Formerly an indenture or charta partita, each bargainer taking his half of the deed.)

Chattels: movable goods. 'Personal chattels' include apparel and ornaments, and also household furnishings and equipments; but not chattels used for business purposes.

Cheque: Bill of Exchange drawn on a banker (see Bill of Exchange).

Choses in Action: such forms of property (like the right to sue for a debt due) as are not either lands or movable chattels.

Collusion: a secret agreement made for the purpose of deceiving the Court, such collusion being a bar to divorce.

Commissioner for Oaths: person, usually a solicitor, authorised to take and to authenticate by his signature a Statutory Declaration.

Common Law: that part of English law which is not expressed in Acts of Parliament, but consists of ancient custom decided upon by judges of the Kings' Courts. It is custom, non-compliance with which is, or may be, attended with penalties.

Commorientes: the dying together of persons in such circumstances that it is uncertain in what order they died. The presumption then is, but only so far as affects title to property, that the older died before the younger.

Composition: arrangement between an insolvent debtor and his creditors whereby the creditors, so that they may receive part of their debts, agree to forego the remainder.

Compounding an Offence: agreeing, for a reward, not to prosecute when the taker of the reward knows that a felony has been committed; such an agreement is a misdemeanour, punishable by fine or imprisonment (see Misprision of Felony).

Compulsory Purchase (Compensation): the acquisition under the authority of Parliament of land or buildings in private ownership, compensation being payable (under the Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation Act, 1956) at the 'fair market value' of the land at the time of acquisition, no account being taken of the compulsory purchase order affecting the land.

Condition: an understanding in a contract upon which the binding force of the contract depends. The condition may be expressed or only implied: when goods are sold by description there is an implied condition that the goods correspond with the description.

Condonation: a tacit forgiveness or overlooking, evidenced by not allowing the offence to make any difference in one's relations with the offender, such condonation being a bar to divorce.

Connivance: a tacit sanction, a shutting of one's eyes to a thing that one dislikes but is unable to prevent, such connivance being a bar to divorce.

Contract: an agreement such as the law will recognize and either enforce or order compensation for its breach.

Contract uberrimae fidei (of the utmost good faith): an agreement in which (as in insurance contracts) the utmost good faith is requisite.

Conversion: unjustifiable act of ownership with another's movable property, the act giving the owner a right to sue for the full value.

Copyright: right, secured to the first author of a literary or artistic work by the Copyright Act, to control the use of that work.

Corporation: a fictitious person having legal rights and liabilities, created by the express or implied authority of the Crown. Thus, a limited liability company is a corporation. The term juristic person is at times applied, a person only in the contemplation of law.

Corporation aggregate: a corporation consisting of two or more individuals.

Corporation Sole: a corporation (a Bishop, for instance, in his episcopal aspect) consisting of a single individual.

Corroboration: additional evidence giving support to that tendered by one witness. Thus, the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible; but a jury is always warned that it is dangerous to convict on such evidence. Parliament has in some instances made corroboration requisite: it has done so in affiliation cases where the woman's evidence must be 'corroborated in some material particular by other evidence to the satisfaction of the justices.'

Cravings: requests presented to the Home Secretary by a sheriff for the payment of expenses incurred in the execution of his office, as a craving of ten guineas for each functioning of the hangman.

Custodier: Scottish equivalent of 'bailee,' he that has the lawful custody of goods.

Cy-près Scheme: a scheme approved by the Chancery Judge, when he has been satisfied that the precise purpose for which money has been left cannot be carried out, whereby he sanctions a scheme 'as near as possible' to that intended by the testator.

Damages (Exemplary, Punitive, Vindictive): augmented damages awarded when a defendant has been malicious or high-handed, the usual measure of damages being the loss directly suffered by a plaintiff.

Days of Grace: three added days to the date of payment of a bill of exchange unless such bill is payable on demand; when the last of such days falls on Sunday, Christmas Day, Good Friday or a public holiday the bill is payable on the preceding business day; when the last day is a bank holiday, other than Christmas Day and Good Friday, the bill is payable on the succeeding business day.

Debenture: acknowledgment by an incorporated company of indebtedness; it is for a specific sum of money, and it usually includes a charge upon the assets of the company.

Del credere (agent): agent that in addition to his making a binding contract on behalf of his principal also guarantees to the other party his principal's ability to pay the price.

Detinue (Action of): action for the refusal to give up (detention of) another's goods without there being legal excuse for the detention.

Devastavit (he has wasted): writ that can be issued against the administrator of an estate when by his negligence the beneficiaries get less than they should have done.

Development Plans: plans prepared by a local authority, in accordance with a duty imposed by the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, indicating how the area is expected to develop. These plans are available for inspection in the Town Hall and should be studied by a possible buyer of house or land in the area.

Devise: give by Will, applied to real property, and sometimes contrasted with Bequeath applied to personal property: 'give' is an adequate substitute for either.

Dilapidations: defects in a building to be made good by a leaseholder when his lease expires.

Distress: a legal seizure of another's chattels in order that the owner may be constrained to do something, as to pay rent; anciently the seizer, the distrainor, could only keep the goods, later he obtained power to sell to satisfy his claim.

Distress Damage-Feasant: the seizure of trespassing cattle doing damage, and their keeping until the owner proffers amends, a method of self-help almost wholly replaced by an action for Trespass Damage-Feasant.

Document of Title: document (bill of lading, dock warrant, warehouse-keeper's certificate, and the like) used in business to prove control of goods so as to transfer them by sale or otherwise.

Domicile: the 'home' of a person; it is either a 'domicile of origin' into which he was born, or a 'domicile of choice' when a person of full legal capacity adopts another home.

Donatio mortis causa: gift of a chattel made by one that is ill and contemplating death, delivery of the chattel being made, the gift being void should the giver recover.

Double Taxation Relief: arrangement whereby a taxpayer, liable to tax in two countries, is relieved. The Board of Inland Revenue issues a full explanatory note: it is obtainable from the Inspector of Taxes. The relief is usually half the greater of the taxes.

Duress: such an intimidation as would constrain a person of ordinary courage to agree against his wishes to what is proposed to him.

Earnest: something given as a pledge or for the purpose of binding a bargain (as an engagement ring).

Easement: right or privilege of making use, for a specific purpose, of another's land (as a right of way).

Emblements: sown crops not as yet reaped from the ground; these come into the class of 'goods' and may be the subject of sale while still growing.

Eminent Domain: the State's sovereign power over property in its jurisdiction, whereby it may appropriate, with or against the owner's will, any part needed for the public service. See Compulsory Purchase (Compensation).

Equitable Mortgage: loan where the collateral security is recognized and enforced under equity: a bank will lend on condition that title deeds are lodged with it until repayment. The lodgment is an equitable mortgage and avoids the costs of a legal mortgage.

Equity: the rules enforced by the Lord Chancellor and the Court of Chancery whereby what was morally just and fair was made to prevail.

Escrow: deed or other evidence of promise, delivered to a third party, and to be delivered to the grantee only when a condition is fulfilled.

Estoppel: denial of a man's right to tell the truth about a matter when by word or deed he has made his opponent believe what was not true. Thus, in a deed conveying property, no party to the deed is allowed to deny any clear and explicit statement made in the deed; and he that has a lease is estopped from denying the lessor's title.

Estovers: necessaries allowed by law, e.g., timber for a tenant (for repair as 'housebote,' for fences as 'haybote'), alimony for a separated wife, and the like.

Ex gratia: out of kindness and not under a legal obligation (applied to payments where the receiver could not compel payment).

Ex parte: one side only being before the Court, so that the Court can give no final decision (applied to such matters as an emergency injunction, or an affidavit).

Fee-simple: an estate in land whereby the owner and his heirs without restriction can dispose of the property (freehold).

Fee-tail: an estate in land the inheritance of which is limited (entailed) to a particular class of heirs.

Felony: such a serious crime as formerly entailed, besides physical punishment, the forfeiture of lands and goods, and the corruption of blood. Treason, murder, robbery are felonies.

Fiduciary: having to do with faith or trust, applied to Fiduciary Currency, valueless tokens taken in the belief that they will be accepted in payment, and to Fiduciary Ownership, that of a trustee.

Fi. fa. (Writ of): the full words are Fieri facias ('cause to be made'); a command in the sovereign's name addressed to the sheriff to seize such goods of the defendant as can be sold to satisfy a judgment creditor.

Foreclosure: proceeding by a lender on mortgage in order to bar the right of the borrower to redeem his mortgage, the property pledged as security becoming, if the proceedings succeed, the lender's property.

Franchise (sometimes called Liberty): a royal privilege enjoyed by a subject. Thus, a fair or market franchise entitles a person to the exclusive right to hold a fair or market at a particular place and to demand tolls. The term is also applied to a freedom to choose (as a vote for a Member of Parliament).

Fraud: deceit, conduct that produces in the mind of another an erroneous belief that causes him to act to his prejudice.

Gaol-delivery: clearing by the judge on circuit of a gaol of prisoners at the Assizes, the prisoners being either freed or punished.

Garnishment: proceeding whereby an unsatisfied judgment creditor can, by service of a Garnishee Order, attach and make payable to himself money payable by a third party to the judgment debtor.

Goodwill: reputation built up during a period of trading, which reputation becomes an asset capable of being sold, the seller undertaking that he will not conduct business under the old name nor solicit the customers of the old business.

Guarantee: undertaking by one person (the surety) to be answerable if another person fails to discharge a liability incurred by him (as to pay a debt when due).

Guardian ad litem: one appointed by the Court to defend a suit brought against a minor (see Next Friend).

Habeas Corpus: right of anyone on behalf of a person whose freedom is restrained to apply to a judge that the person shall be brought before that judge so that the lawfulness of the restraint may be investigated: such application, when any apparently good reason accompanies it, must be granted.

Holograph: Will, written wholly by the person in whose name it appears (applied to a Will such as is valid in Scotland though not in England).

Hotchpot: getting together an intestate's property in order to secure equality of division, so that a child to whom a portion has been advanced in the parent's lifetime must bring that portion into account if he wishes to share.

Immemorial Custom: 'custom whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary,' a period long ago fixed as beginning with the first year (1189) of Richard I, now interpreted as the time of actual human memory.

Indemnity: undertaking to make good any loss occasioned by acting as the indemnifier wishes; a relief from penalties incurred.

Indictable Offences: the more serious crimes (murder for instance) triable by a jury at Quarter Sessions or Assizes or Central Criminal Court (Old Bailey): the formal accusation is the Indictment.

Indictment: a formal accusation of a prisoner after preliminary proceedings, the trial being in a superior Court, as opposed to summary proceedings.

Injunction: order by a Court to refrain from a wrong against one's neighbour, disobedience of which order may entail imprisonment for 'Contempt of Court.'

Innuendo: special and defamatory meaning alleged by a plaintiff to be contained in expressions not on the face of them derogatory to the plaintiff.

Interlocutory: between the beginning of an action and the decision (applied to such an order of the Court as is needed to preserve the right of one party, as when a defendant is forbidden to repeat what may in the end be judged a libel).

Interpleader: action between two parties, each claiming what a third party holds for one of them (as when a stakeholder is in doubt). The Scottish term is Multiple-poinding.

Laches: such unexplained and blameworthy delay in seeking a legal remedy as may cause the Court to refuse to give the remedy.

Lands Tribunal: a tribunal consisting of a Legal Chairman appointed by the Lord Chancellor and two nominated members, from panels prepared by the National Farmers' Union and the Central Land Owners' Association, set up to determine questions affecting land, appeals against valuation, for instance.

Lapse (of Legacy or Device): failure of a gift made by Will owing to the death of the intended beneficiary before that of the testator, the property lapsed falling into residue.

Legacy (Specific): gift of a piece of personal property, sufficiently described by the testator to identify it, to be separated from the rest of the estate.

Legal Aid: right given by the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, to a litigant of moderate means, similar to that long enjoyed in Scotland, of having professional help to present his cause. The upper income limit for eligibility for aid is a 'disposable income' of £420 a year (which means a gross income of about £750). The litigant seeks from the Secretary of his Legal Aid Area a certificate of civil aid and, when any reasonable cause is presented, he has the services of a solicitor and a Counsel. The scheme is under the control of The Law Society; the country is divided into twelve Legal Aid Areas, each with its committee and secretary. Inquiry should be made at The Law Society, Stone Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.2.

Legal Capacity: ability to acquire legal rights (which ability dates from birth) and ability to transact legal business (which is fully attained at majority).

Legal Presumption: the acceptance by law of the truth of a fact until evidence to the contrary is forthcoming. Thus, there is a legal presumption of innocence until guilt is proved; and there is a presumption of death when a person has not been heard of for seven years. Some presumptions are not rebuttable whatever evidence is adduced, as the presumption that a child not yet fourteen years old cannot commit a crime.

Legal Tender: currency (coin and paper) that a creditor is obliged to take in payment of his debt. Thus, Treasury notes are legal tender for the cancelling of a debt whatever its amount; silver only for a debt of £2.

Licence (as distinct from Lease): permission to enter upon another's land for a specific purpose as distinct from a grant of exclusive possession; the licence converts a trespasser into a licensee.

Lien: right to retain another's property until that other fulfils a duty legally imposed upon him (as an unpaid seller's lien upon the goods sold).

Limitation: the restriction imposed upon the claiming of legal rights when delay in making the claim is excessive (e.g. a debt over six years old is prescribed).

Majority: the attainment of age of full legal capacity, attained at the beginning of the day preceding the twenty-first birthday.

Malicious Prosecution: without reasonable cause and with the intention to bring into disrepute charging a person with a crime, the prosecution being unsuccessful.

Mandamus ('We command'): writ issued from the Queen's Bench Court commanding an inferior Court to do a specified thing.

Market Overt: open market, where the buyer of goods, even though stolen, acquires a good title to them when he buys in good faith; thus, any open shop in the City of London during business hours is, in respect of goods usually exposed there for sale, market overt. (When, however, a thief is successfully prosecuted, a writ of restitution to the former owner may be issued by the Court.)

Marriage (Presumption of Validity): rule that a ceremony of marriage followed by cohabitation must be presumed to be valid in every respect unless compelling evidence to the contrary is forthcoming.

Matrimonial Policy: insurance effected by a man on his own life and expressed to be for the benefit of his wife, or his children. The money payable under this policy does not form part of the insured's estate, nor is it subject to his debts. The same applies to a similar policy effected by a wife.

Memorandum of Association: written conditions of the existence of a company, including a statement of the extent of the powers granted to it; a charter not to be changed at the will of the company.

Mens Rea (a guilty mind): except for certain offences created by statute and imposing absolute lisbility (as in food offences), this is the essential attribute of a crime: no crime without fault.

Mercantile Law (Lex Mercatoria): rules observed by medieval merchants in their transactions, those rules now for the most part, being made applicable to all in the realm.

Mesne: occurring between two dates. Thus, mesne profits are the profits of an estate received by a tenant in wrongful possession between two dates.

Misdemeanour: evil behaviour; in a wide sense applied to all crimes and offences for which the law has no special name; in a narrow sense applied to crimes less serious than felonies.

Misprision of Felony: neglect of duty when one, not being a party to it, who knows of a felony having been committed, does not disclose it to the police.

Mortgage: the conveyance of property by a mortgagor (the debtor) to a mortgagee (the creditor) as additional security for a money debt, the understanding being that the property shall be re-conveyed upon payment of the debt (see Equitable Mortgage).

Mortmain (dead hand): the holding of land by an ecclesiastical or other corporation without power to transfer it to another.

Necessaries (supplied to a minor): such things as are suitable to the minor's station in life and not in excess of actual requirements at the time; for such the minor is under obligation to pay a reasonable price, which may be less than the contract price.

Negotiable Instrument: documentary title to money such as (like a Cheque or a Bill of Exchange) is transferable by custom and gives to the transferee who takes it in good faith and for value a right to the money.

Next Friend: one that brings an action on behalf of a minor, the minor being unable to appear in his own right. The minor defends an action by his guardian ad litem.

Nuncupative: by word of mouth (applied to the valid Wills made by men and women being on active military service).

Nuisance: act or omission whereby a person is deprived of a substantial amount of the enjoyment and comfort derived from his land; it is a Public Nuisance when the loss is suffered by the public at large, it is a Private Nuisance when an individual suffers particular loss.

Option: right, acquired by purchase, of choosing whether over a specified period to make a binding contract for the buying (Call Option) or for the selling (Put Option) of shares or of produce; also applied to an Option to Purchase, a house for instance, the seller then being bound to keep his offer open for the stipulated period.

Oyer and terminer ('to hear and to end'): commission issued to the judges on circuit to the Assizes directing them to hold Courts for the trial of offences.

Paraphernalia: personal ornaments and wearing apparel handed by a husband to his wife in order to maintain the credit of his establishment, and remaining liable to satisfy the husband's debts.

Partnership: business association (Firm) whereby each associate becomes in the business of the partnership the unlimited agent of the others.

Party Structure: wall or fence deemed to be severed vertically between the adjoining owners, each owner being entitled to a right of support from the other owner's part; that is to say, the maintenance is a joint liability.

Patent: monopoly granted to an inventor for a period of seven years as a reward for disclosing his invention. A pamphlet obtainable free of charge from Patent Office, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.2, gives full instruction to applicants.

Perpetuities (Rule against): rule whereby it is made impossible to control property beyond a period of twenty-one years after the expiry of a life or lives in being.

Per proc Signature: one made by a person formally authorised (per procurationem) to sign as proxy or attorney for another; the usual signature is p.p Grant Bros. Ltd., Henry Murray, the company having given their manager the requisite authority.

Per stirpes: by way of stocks or branches and not by way of number, applied, for instance, when children take a share that would have gone to a deceased parent. (Thus, A's estate devolves upon the children of his brother B and his sister C; B has three children, C one; each child of B takes one-sixth, the child of C takes a half.

Pie-powders (Court of): Court for the speedy settlement of disputes arising among itinerant merchants attending a fair, who, coming from far, were dusty-footed (pieds poudrés).

Plaintiff: party bringing suit in a Court of law against a Defendant. The Scottish terms are Pursuer, Complainer and Defender.

Post-dated Cheque: cheque to be presented for payment at a date subsequent to its being made and delivered: 'it is not invalid by reason only that it is ante-dated or post-dated, or that it bears date on a Sunday.'

Power of Attorney: document whereby a right to act for its giver is evidenced, the right being for a specific act or for a period.

Precedents: former decisions that are followed when similar cases arise: the House of Lords considers itself bound to follow its own previous decisions; and inferior Courts are bound to follow the decisions of any superior Court.

Precept: order issued by a County Council to a rating authority for an amount of money to be raised for county needs (see Rates).

Premium Bonds: obligations, in accordance with the Finance Act, 1956, whereby the State engages to repay loans of one pound and more, the repayments being augmented, in instances determined by lot, by prizes of £1,000 or less.

Prerogative: sovereign right subject (in theory) to no restriction or interference, the right nowadays being exercised by Ministers or other agents of the Crown. Thus, the Home Secretary exercises at his unfettered discretion the royal prerogative of mercy to a condemned criminal.

Prescription: uninterrupted enjoyment of the use of land over a period, the enjoyment developing into a right at the end of the period (as a regular passage over another's land develops into a right in twenty years).

Press Privilege: right given, by the Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888, to newspapers to publish fair and accurate reports of public meetings or of judicial proceedings without being liable (unless malice attends the publication) to damages for defamation.

Presumption (see Legal Presumption).

Private Nuisance: See Nuisance; a private nuisance is a civil wrong.

Probation: suspension of a sentence passed upon a young person, particularly of a first offender, during good behaviour and while under the supervision of a probation officer, whose duty is to befriend and advise.

Profit à prendre: legal right enjoyed by the occupier of one piece of land to take part of the produce (herbage, gravel, wood, or the like) of another's land: the right cannot extend to crops produced by human labour.

Promissory Note: unconditional promise in writing made by one person to another, signed by the promiser and engaging to pay, on demand or at a definite future time, a sum of money to a specified person or to his order, or to bearer. (A Treasury note and a Bank of England note are examples.)

Public Nuisance: See Nuisance; a public nuisance is a crime.

Puis-ne (later born): junior, applied to such judges of the High Court as have no special rank; they are appointed by the Queen on the advice of the Lord Chancellor.

The Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice, the Master of the Rolls, the President of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, and the Appeal Judges are appointed by the Queen on the advice of the Prime Minister.

Quit Rent: payment by a freeholder to be freed of personal services to the overlord.

Recognizance: bond entered into by a person with a magistrate or a Court engaging himself, subject to a forfeit, to appear when called upon for trial.

Residuary Estate: whatever of a testator's estate remains for distribution after claims upon it, including claims for devises and legacies that take effect.

Res perit domino (a thing deteriorates to its owner's loss): risk of loss or damage to goods passes, along with the property in the goods, to the buyer even though delivery is not made.

Reversion: right of the ground landlord to the ownership of a house or other building when the lessee's right comes to an end, in general the right of possession after another's right has expired.

Root of Title: the incident forming the basis upon what right to property depends, an incident purporting to transfer unchallengeable ownership.

Salvage: compensation to which such persons as have by their voluntary efforts saved a ship or its cargo from loss are legally entitled; also applied to the property saved.

Sanction (of a Law): penalty prescribed in order to enforce obedience to a law.

Search Warrant: authorization given by a magistrate enabling a constable to search the premises of a suspected person.

Servitude: subjection of one owner's land (the Servient Tenement) to a right exercisable by the owner of adjoining land (the Dominant Tenement), as, e.g., a right of way.

Share: an undivided part of the nominal capital of a company, evidenced by a numbered certificate. When the nominal capital is fully paid up, it may be converted into Stock, saleable in any amount.

Signature: name or other sign placed on a document by a person in order to authenticate that the document is his or hers: when an Act requires signature, a mark, or initials, or stamp, when intended as signature, suffices.

Solicitor: lawyer that, having served a period of articles to a practising solicitor and having passed the examinations of the Law Society, has his name enrolled as an officer of the Supreme Court.

Solicitor-General (see Attorney-General).

Specialty Debt: debt due under a deed or other sealed document (specialty), which debt can be sued for within twelve years as against the six years for an ordinary debt.

Specific Performance: constraint placed in suitable events upon a contractor whereby the Court secures fulfilment of the contract in place of a payment of damages for its non-fulfilment.

Stamp Duty (Conveyance): amount payable to Revenue when ownership of property is transferred: the rates on the transfer of house-ownership are, by the 1956 Finance Act, 10s. per £100 up to £3,500; £1 per £100 where the price exceeds £3,500 but does not exceed £4,250; £1 10s. per £100 where the price exceeds £4,250 but does not exceed £5,000; and £2 per £100 thereafter.

Stamp Duty (Mortgage): duty payable on both the creation of and the redemption of a legal mortgage; the creation conveys the property mortgaged to the lander, the redemption re-conveys it to the borrower.

Stale Cheque: cheque that has been unpresented for payment for an unreasonable length of time; unless he obtains special order from his customer a banker will usually refuse to pay a cheque six months old.

Statute Law: law as expressed by Acts of Parliament. Where this conflicts with the rules of common law those rules are no longer in force.

Statutory Declaration: a declaration made in order to supply the lack of other evidence (as when no Birth Certificate is available for an applicant for Old Age Pension) before a Commissioner for Oaths. It is in this form, 'I, A. B., do solemnly and sincerely declare that ..... and I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true.' A declaration known to be false is perjury.

Stipendiary (Magistrate): a paid Justice of the Peace appointed from Barristers of seven years' standing for the Courts of Summary Justice in London and other large towns; he sits alone as a Petty Sessions Court.

Subrogation: right to stand in another's place in respect of legal remedies. Thus an insurer, having paid to his insured, has all the rights against the wrongdoer that the insured could have exercised.

Summary Offences: such offences as can be speedily disposed of in a Magistrates' Court, common law formalities being dispensed with.

Survivorship (Right of): the right of one joint-owner, on the death of the other joint-owner or joint-owners, to the property, this right being unaffected by any direction in the Will of the deceased joint-owner (see Will).

Swearing the Peace: declaring upon oath before a Justice of the Peace that the declarer is in fear of bodily harm by a named person, whereupon the Justice is bound to require the named person to bind himself to keep the peace.

Testamentary Capacity: power, by having sound mind, good memory and good understanding, to make a valid Will, such power being assumed in the absence of strong evidence to the contrary.

Title: right, applied in particular to the ownership of realty, houses and lands; applied also to the evidence of ownership as in Title-deeds.

Trade Mark: distinctive device used in connection with goods and indicating that the goods are those of the owner of the device, which mark being registered on the Register of Trade Marks at the Patent Office is restricted to such goods.

Trover (Action of): action to recover the value of property converted by the defendant to his own use, an action originally based upon a fictitious finding (trouver) combined with refusal to give up.

Trust: obligation (as of an Executor) to hold and deal with property conscientiously for the benefit of another or others than the person (Trustee) subject to the obligation.

Ultra Vires (beyond the powers): act done when no legal authority to do the act exists, applied to a Bye-law outside the scope of the power delegated by Parliament, and to the acts of a Company outside its Memorandum of Association.

Undue Influence: power arising from position over a person's mind (as that of a guardian over his ward) whereby that person is induced to act to his harm.

Vicarious Liability: liability arising from a relation with a wrongdoer liable in the first place; an employer is vicariously liable for the wrongdoings of his employee while in the course of the employment; a principal is vicariously liable for the authorised acts of his agent. But a husband is no longer (since 1935) liable for his wife's wrongdoings.

Vis Major (greater power): circumstances beyond a person's control, in some instances excusing the defendant for harm caused by him. (At times called 'Act of God'; Force Majeure is a synonym.)

Ward of Court: minor taken into the guardianship of the Court of Chancery, which may be done when, as at times in a divorce, the welfare of the child is in jeopardy, or when a question arises concerning property.

Warranty: undertaking, expressed or implied, by one of the parties to a contract, as by the seller of goods, that he will be answerable for their possession of some quality attributed to them. (Also called Guarantee.)

Without Prejudice: without injury or loss to one's rights or claims, the term being applied especially to letters seeking to bring about a settlement: when it is clear that these were written 'without prejudice,' they are privileged and cannot be adduced as evidence.

Wreck (Right to): right to take goods resulting from the loss of a ship, the owner of the goods being unknown for a year and a day; the goods include flotsam, which has floated away on the sinking, jetsam, which was thrown over to lighten the ship, and ligan, which was thrown over and its site marked by a buoy.

Writ: a sealed letter issued in the name of King or Queen commanding a person to do what is specified in the writ: a defendant is summoned to Court by a writ addressed to him.

Zoning: indication by a local planning authority of how the development of its area is to be controlled. It is a matter of concern to one about to buy a house, or land upon which to build, to note where 'agricultural,' 'residential' or 'industrial' zones are contemplated.

40. NATIONAL INSURANCE

Compulsory Insurance of Workers

The National Insurance Act, 1946, among its other provisions, obliges an employee who has reached school-leaving age (at present fifteen) to take precautions against some of the inevitable risks of life. He must insure against these; and his employer must contribute towards the insurance premium. The current rates of contributions can be obtained from any National Insurance Office.

The risks insured against are:

Lack of Employment preventing Earning: Unemployment Benefit lessens the loss.

Disabling Sickness curtailing Earning Power: Sickness Benefit lessens the loss.

Diminished or Total Inability to Earn in Old Age: Retirement Pension is Part Compensation.

Premature Death Preventing Provision for Widow: Widow's Allowance, Widowed Mother's Allowance, and Widow's Pension provide for this contingency.

Woman Worker's Temporary Inability to earn while having a child: Maternity Grant and Maternity Allowances provide for this.

Conditions of Insurance

As in all insurances conditions attend the benefits: the conditions relate to (1) Person to receive the benefit (thus, though she may receive it in virtue of her husband's contribution, a maternity grant is paid to a woman on confinement), (2) Number of Contributions, (3) Time for Claim, (4) Amount and Duration.

The conditions are fully and clearly set out in leaflets obtainable free at the local Pensions and National Insurance Office. The officials there are always patient and sympathetic to remove difficulties; an employer or employee who is in any doubt should consult them.

Industrial Injuries

By a separate Act, the National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act, 1946, a worker was obliged to guard against one further risk, that an accident while at work might entail temporary or permanent loss of earning power, or that a disease engendered by the occupation might come upon him. The employer pays over half of the premium, and he is relieved—though not wholly—of possible claims against him by his employee. Benefit under the Act is paid even though an additional right to claim damages exists: an injured worker is not obliged, as he was in the repealed Workmen's Compensation Act, to elect whether to claim benefit or damages. The Law Reform (Personal Injuries) Act, 1948, however, says that, if action is taken for damages the fact that benefit is payable must be taken into account. Contributions to the Industrial Injuries fund are payable during employment, even when (as a man is at seventy, a woman at sixty-five) their contributor is relieved from contributing to the general fund.

Administration of the Insurance Schemes

For purposes of administration the two schemes are worked together; and to facilitate working, each employee has a card which goes with him if he changes employers. The cards, of different colours in accordance with the 'contribution year,' bear the symbols A, B, C, D; and they are allocated in order that, as nearly as may be, equal numbers of employees shall begin their year on the first Monday in March, June, September, December.

Employer's Liability
The burden upon the employer in working the schemes is heavy. He is made liable for seeing that every insurable person in his employment is, in fact, insured, that cards are preserved and stamped, and that faithful records are kept. He, too, collects payment, and he has special obligations under the Industrial Injuries scheme. These obligations are carefully set out in an easily intelligible way in the Ministry's Leaflet M.I. 20, 'Employer's Guide to National Insurance.' (Obtainable free at a National Insurance Office.)

41. GUIDE TO TAXATION

Direct and Indirect Taxation
A Direct Tax is one levied on the person intended to bear its burden; your income tax is such. An Indirect Tax is one levied on a person intended and able to shift the burden. You are indirectly taxed on tea; the importer pays the tax, but recoups it from the price you pay.

In our tax system, direct taxes are purposely made progressive; they take a greater fraction of a rich man's income than of a poor man's income. Indirect taxes are, however, bound to be regressive; the poor man who smokes cigarettes pays in their price a greater fraction of his income, because of tax, than the rich man does.

These notes deal with direct taxation (income tax while a man is alive, death duty when he is dead) leaving aside the indirect taxes paid in the augmented cost of goods (purchase tax and excise duties on a multiplicity of things). The combined effect of the two is to divert to the State, from all but the poorest, about half of the spending power available.

Income Tax: Standard Rate
For income tax the annual Finance Act (introduced in the April Budget speech by the Chancellor of the Exchequer), supplemented in a time of emergency by an autumn Finance Act, fixes a standard rate of tax on every pound of income. But hardly anyone pays at the standard rate. For the tax has been made progressive, taking a less part of a small income, a greater part of a large income. It does this by making exemptions and reductions and allowances at the lower end of the scale, and by imposing an additional tax (sur-tax) at the higher end.

Reliefs and Allowances
The first part of income above the exemption level is charged at a reduced rate; and to all individuals, whatever their income, varying amounts are made free of taxes. These allowances are in respect of: Earned Income (as distinct from Investment Income) Allowance (this has in recent years been two-ninths, so that where income from dividends paid 9s. in tax, income from earnings paid 7s.); Wife's Earned Income Allowance (this in effect enables a wife to earn up to £160 without thereby increasing her husband's income tax, the wife's income being for tax purposes looked on as part of the husband's income); Age Allowance (this, equal usually to Earned Income Allowance, relieves the income of a man and his wife when the taxpayer is sixty-five or over); Personal Allowance; Housekeeper or Person looking after Children Allowance (this is hedged about with conditions; but it includes a widower whose female relative is his housekeeper, a separated spouse employing a resident housekeeper to look after house and children, and a married man employing a housekeeper because his wife is permanently disabled from looking after the children); Child Allowance (this continues for each of the taxpayer's children up to their reaching sixteen and beyond when they follow a full-time educational course); Dependent Relative Allowance; Insurance Allowance (this was designed to encourage providence).

Comparisons
Here are some contrasted results of the charges and reliefs, the standard rate being 8s. 6d. in the pound: (1) a single person earning £150 paid no tax, earning £250 he paid £9, earning £5,000 he paid £2,428; (2) a married man, with three children, earning £600 paid no tax, earning £1,000 he paid £71; earning £5,000 he paid £2,273.

Classification of Income
A taxpayer may be liable to tax on one or more of five schedules. These are Schedule A (the 'property' tax), the income being calculated on the assumed net rent obtainable from houses and other real property; Schedule B, income derived from the occupation of woodlands, gardens and other lands, except farm land, occupied for profit—the basis is one-third of the Schedule A value; Schedule C, income from dividends on public securities—no assessment is made, for the tax is deducted at source; Schedule D, this comprises six 'Cases': (1) profits, e.g., by trading, by farming, by market-gardening (the revenue from profit is augmented by a separate 'Profits Tax.' This was in 1927 imposed on all as a temporary measure; but it still persists in respect of company profits); (2) professional fees and profits; (3) interest untaxed at source (War Loan Interest, Bank Interest including Post Office Savings Bank interest, and the like); (4) income from foreign and colonial securities; (5) income from foreign and colonial possessions; (6) the 'sweeping-up case' annual profits and gains not assessed under any other heading: under this, for instance, 'excess rents' are entered, the excess of the rent over the net annual value of any property let by you; Schedule E (the Pay-As-You-Earn Schedule) wages, salaries, director's fees, pensions and other remunerative arising from employment

P.A.Y.E.

Except for the last, tax is payable on the income of the year preceding the assessment. To enable P.A.Y.E. payments to be calculated and deducted each employee has a 'Code Number,' indicating what reliefs and allowances he is entitled to; the employer has tax tables and deducts in accordance with the Code Number; necessary adjustments are made by the tax inspector at the end of the fiscal year. The responsibility for collecting the tax is placed upon the employer.

Rates of Sur-tax

Sur-tax, the added tax payable by one whose total income from all sources exceeds £2,000, is due on 1st January following the year of assessment. Probably it has now reached its ultimate height: when the standard rate was 8s. 6d., every pound that one earned above £15,000 gave him 1s. 6d. of spending power. The rate has been stable since 1951. Here it is:

Up to £2,000	Nil.
£2,001 to £2,500	at 2s. 0d.	in the £.
£2,501 to £3,000	at 2s. 6d.	,,
£3,001 to £4,000	at 3s. 6d.	,,
£4,001 to £5,000	at 4s. 6d.	,,
£5,001 to £6,000	at 5s. 6d.	,,
£6,001 to £8,000	at 6s. 6d.	,,
£8,001 to £10,000	at 7s. 6d.	,,
£10,001 to £12,000	at 8s. 6d.	,,
£12,001 to £15,000	at 9s. 6d.	,,
Above £15,000	at 10s. 0d.	,,

Schedule A Tax

The Schedule A tax is levied on the owner-occupier of a house on this assumption: his saving of rent payable to a landlord is equivalent to an income of the net rent. This net rent is the gross valuation of the house for rates less a 'repairs allowance.' The repairs allowance is made, without your needing to claim it, at this rate:

On a house with gross annual value up to £40: One-quarter.

On a house with gross annual value £40 to £50: £10.

On a house with gross annual value £50 to £100: One-fifth.

On a house with gross annual value over £100: £20+one-sixth excess over £100.

When, however, you have over a period of five years spent upon repairs more than the statutory deduction, you are entitled to deduct this higher amount. At the present cost of repairs this is probably applicable to most owner-occupied houses. It has been authoritatively stated that the new rating valuation is not yet to affect Schedule A tax.

Foreign Income

Such income (classified under cases 4 and 5 of Schedule D) as you may get from foreign or colonial securities and possessions is, most likely, subject to tax in the place of its origin. We have, however, reciprocal arrangements with most countries whereby a taxpayer in any is relieved of double taxation. The result of most arrangements is that, in one or the other country, you pay at the higher rate appropriate to the income. The arrangements are usually a little complicated; but your District Inspector of Taxes will explain those relevant to the country in which you are interested.

This final point on income tax is worth your notice. You have a standing invitation, much less acted upon than it deserves to be, when you have doubt upon any point of income tax law, to consult the District Inspector of Taxes. His address is on your income tax form.

Estate Duty

The State has, by the Finance Act, 1949, in great measure made itself the heir of all but the smallest estates. It has done so by imposing an estate duty on the aggregate value of property passing at a person's death. The duty is steeply progressive: an estate up to £3,000 pays no duty; an estate of £1,000,000 pays £800,000. These are the rates:

Principal value of Estate £		Rate per cent
Not exceeding	3,000	Nil
Exceeding 3,000	and not exceeding 4,000	1
4,000	5,000	2
5,000	7,500	3
7,500	10,000	4
10,000	12,500	6
12,500	15,000	8
15,000	17,500	10
17,500	20,000	12
20,000	25,000	15
25,000	30,000	18
30,000	35,000	21
35,000	40,000	24
40,000	45,000	28
45,000	50,000	31
50,000	60,000	35
60,000	75,000	40
75,000	100,000	45
100,000	150,000	50
150,000	200,000	55
200,000	300,000	60
300,000	500,000	65
500,000	750,000	70
750,000	1,000,000	75
1,000,000	..	80

Gifts beyond £500 made to any one person within five years of the death are to be included in the aggregate value for the purpose of calculating the estate duty. In general the person who received the gifts is liable for the duty upon them.

Agricultural property is, however, charged at the above rates with an abatement of 45 per cent.; and such property includes 'agricultural land, pastures and woodlands, and also such cottages, farm buildings, farmhouses and such mansion houses (with the lands occupied) as are of a character appropriate to the property.' This last gives rise to differences of opinion. Nearly always, however, a satisfactory arrangement is reached by negotiation with the Revenue Officers who, both in respect of estate duty and income tax, are scrupulously fair and very ready to help the taxpayer.

42. CEREMONIOUS FORMS OF ADDRESS

The correct mode of addressing the envelope and the heading at the beginning of the letter, with the ending where necessary, when writing to titled persons and holders of certain offices, are given below:

The Queen: 'The Queen's Most Excellent Majesty,' or 'Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II.' Begin 'May it please Your Majesty' or 'Madam.' End 'I have the honour to remain, Your Majesty's faithful subject.'

Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother: 'Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother.' Begin 'May it please Your Majesty' or 'Madam.' End 'I have the honour to remain, Your Majesty's obedient servant.'

Royal Princes: If a Duke, 'His Royal Highness the Duke of ——.' Begin 'Sir.' Refer to as 'Your Royal Highness.' End 'I have the honour to remain, Your Royal Highness's most dutiful subject.' If not a Duke 'His Royal Highness Prince ——' (Christian name).

Royal Princesses: If a Duchess, 'Her Royal Highness the Duchess of ——.' If not a Duchess, 'Her Royal Highness the Princess ——' (Christian name). Begin 'Madam.' Refer to as 'Your Royal Highness.' End 'Your Royal Highness's dutiful and obedient servant.'

Duke (not Royal): 'His Grace the Duke of ——.' Begin 'My Lord Duke.' End 'I have the honour to be, Your Grace's most obedient servant.' Refer to as 'Your Grace.'

Duchess (not Royal): 'Her Grace the Duchess of ——.' Begin 'Madam.' End 'Your Grace's most obedient servant.' Refer to as 'Your Grace.'

Marquess: 'The Most Hon. the Marquess of ——.' Begin 'My Lord Marquess.' End 'I have the honour to be, my Lord Marquess, your most obedient servant.' Refer to as 'Your Lordship.'

Marchioness: 'The Most Hon. the Marchioness of ——.' Begin 'Madam.' End 'I have the honour to remain, Madam, Your Ladyship's obedient servant.' Refer to as 'Your Ladyship.'

Earl: 'The Right Hon. the Earl of ——.' Begin 'My Lord.' End 'I have the honour to be, Your Lordship's most obedient servant.' Refer to as 'Your Lordship.'

Countess: 'The Right Hon. the Countess of ——.' Begin 'Madam.' End 'I have the honour to be, Your Ladyship's most obedient servant.' Refer to as 'Your Ladyship.'

Viscount: 'The Right Hon. the Viscount ——.' Begin 'My Lord.' End 'I have the honour to be, Your Lordship's most obedient servant.' Refer to as 'Your Lordship.'

Viscountess: 'The Right Hon. the Viscountess ——.' Begin 'Madam.' End 'I have the honour to be, Your Ladyship's most obedient servant.' Refer to as 'Your Ladyship.'

Baron: 'The Right Hon. Lord ——,' or 'The Lord ——.' Begin 'My Lord.' End, as for Viscount, or, more simply, 'Your obedient servant.' Refer to as 'Your Lordship.'

Baroness: The Right Hon. Lady ——.' Begin 'Madam.' End as for Viscountess. Refer to as 'Your Ladyship.'

Baronet: 'Sir John Smith, Bt.' Begin 'Sir.' End 'Your obedient servant.'

Knight: 'Sir John Smith.' If of a particular order (Garter, Thistle, Bath, St Michael and St George, etc.) add initials after the name: K.G., K.T., K.C.B., K.C.M.G., etc. Knight Bachelor—no initials after name. Begin 'Sir.' End 'Your obedient servant.'

Baronet's or Knight's Wife: 'Lady Smith.' Begin 'Madam.' End, 'Your obedient servant.' Refer to as 'Your Ladyship.'

Courtesy Titles: The titles taken by the sons and daughters of Dukes, Marquesses and Earls as courtesy titles are treated as though actually belonging to the peerage. The eldest sons of Dukes and Marquesses take, by courtesy, their father's second title. The other sons and daughters are styled 'Lord John ——,' 'Lady Mary ——.' The eldest sons of Earls take, by courtesy, their father's second title, younger sons being styled the Honourable (Hon. John Brown). The daughters of Earls are styled 'Lady Mary ——.' The eldest sons of Viscounts and Barons have no title, but they, as well as their brothers and sisters, are styled 'the Hon. John ——,' 'the Hon. Mary ——.' Eldest sons in the peerage of Scotland are usually addressed 'the Hon. the Master of ——' (peerage title).

If a woman with a courtesy title marries a husband without a title she retains her unmarried title with her change of name: Lady Mary Smith becomes Lady Mary Robinson; the Hon. Mary Smith becomes the Hon. Mary Robinson (not Lady Robinson, nor the Hon. Mrs Robinson).

Dame of the British Empire: 'Dame Mary Smith.' Begin 'Dear Madam.' No set form of ending.

Dowagers (widows of Dukes, Marquesses, Earls, Viscounts and Barons): On the marriage of a peer, the widow of the previous holder of a title becomes 'Dowager' and is addressed 'The Right Hon. the Dowager Countess of ——.' It is customary nowadays, however, to add the Christian name 'The Right Hon. Mary Countess of ——,' omitting the 'Dowager.'

Archbishop: 'His Grace the Lord Archbishop of ——.' Begin 'My Lord Archbishop.' End 'I have the honour to be, my Lord Archbishop, Your Grace's devoted and obedient servant.' Refer to as 'Your Grace.'

Bishop: 'The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of ——.' Begin 'My Lord Bishop.' End 'I have the honour to be, Your Lordship's obedient servant.' Scottish Bishops are addressed as 'The Right Rev. Bishop —— (surname).' The use of 'My Lord Bishop' and 'My Lord' is not correct in this case.

Dean: 'The Very Reverend the Dean of-' Begin 'Very Reverend Sir.' End 'I have the honour to remain, Very Reverend Sir, Your obedient servant.'

Archdeacon: 'The Venerable the Archdeacon of ——.' Begin 'Venerable Sir.' End 'I have the honour to remain, Venerable Sir, Your obedient servant.'

Cardinal: 'His Eminence Cardinal ——.' Begin ''My Lord Cardinal.' End 'I have the honour to be, Your Eminence's obedient servant.' Refer to as 'Your Eminence.'

Lord Chancellor: 'The Right Hon. the Lord Chancellor.' Begin 'My Lord.' End 'I have the honour to be, my Lord, Your Lordship's obedient servant.'

Lord Chief Justice: 'The Right Hon. the Lord Chief Justice of England.' Begin and end as for Lord Chancellor.

Judge: 'The Hon. Sir William Smith' or 'The Hon. Mr Justice Smith.' Begin 'Sir.' End 'I have the honour to be, Sir, Your most obedient servant.' In court only he is addressed as 'My Lord' and referred to as 'Your Lordship.'

Judge, County Court: 'His Honour Judge Brown.' In court only he is referred to as 'Your Honour.' Begin 'Sir.' End as for a Judge.

Lord Mayor: For certain cities 'The Right Hon. the Lord Mayor of ——.' For other cities 'The Right Worshipful the Lord Mayor of ——.' Refer to as 'Your Lordship.' Begin 'My Lord.' End 'Your Lordship's obedient servant.'

Lord Mayor's Wife: 'The (Right) Hon. the Lady Mayoress of ——' (according to husband's address). Begin 'Madam.' Refer to as 'Your Ladyship.'

Mayor: In the case of certain cities 'The Right Worshipful the Mayor of ——'; in other cases 'The Worshipful the Mayor of ——.' Begin 'Sir.' End 'I remain, Sir, Your obedient servant.' Refer to as 'Your Worship.'

Lord Provost (Scotland): 'The Right Hon. the Lord Provost of Edinburgh' or of Glasgow. 'The Lord Provost of Aberdeen' or of Perth. Begin 'My Lord Provost.' End 'Your Lordship's obedient servant.' 'Refer to as 'Your Lordship.'

43. CONDUCT OF MEETINGS

A 'meeting' is an organized assembly for the conduct of business. The assembly may range from a full sitting of the House of Commons to a self-appointed committee arranging a children's party. Whatever its size or purpose, a meeting must have a chairman.

Taking the Chair.
In the House of Commons the Speaker occupies the Chair, but when the House is in committee the Chairman of Ways and Means (who is also the Deputy Speaker) is in charge. In municipal councils the Mayor is the chairman, while in other local governing bodies the chairman of that body presides. For many other meetings an officer such as the president becomes, by the rules of the society, the chairman of all meetings. At many lesser meetings a chairman may be elected by those present.

Frequently the people organizing a meeting have decided among themselves who shall be the chairman and the name is proposed at the earliest moment. 'I propose (or move) that Mr Jones be the chairman of this meeting.' Someone then seconds the motion, and it is agreed to by the meeting.

It is important that the chairman should maintain control of the meeting and do this as far as possible by tact rather than by any display of authority (though this may be necessary in certain circumstances). He should also be impartial in his rulings, avoiding any appearance of favouring one person by allowing him to wander at will away from the subject under discussion while pulling up another speaker for any slight deviation. A good knowledge of the rules of procedure as well as a clear understanding of the object and purposes of the meeting are obviously essential.

There are, of course, so many different kinds of meetings that no set rules would cover them all. The chairman's duties may be simply to preside over a meeting which is being addressed by a well-known speaker. His task then is to make the brief introductory speech and to create a pleasant atmosphere before calling on the principal speaker. The programme for such a meeting, including the chairman's closing speech and vote of thanks to the speaker, followed by a vote of thanks to the chairman, is usually in the secretary's hands.

It is when there is a debate or discussion at a meeting that the rules of debate as generally observed are important. If the body holding the meeting has its own 'standing orders' for such meetings, the chairman, as well as the members, should know them thoroughly.

On the Agenda
Normally the notice of any meeting contains the items to be discussed or settled. This list of subjects to be discussed is known as the Agenda (or, in some cases, as the Order Paper). The different items are listed, the last item usually being 'Any other business.' This gives an opportunity for any member to bring forward some question which has arisen too late for inclusion on the agenda, or to make some proposition or give notice of some question he will raise at the next meeting.

It may be that a decision on this question raised in the closing stages of the meeting cannot be reached without fuller information, and the member who raised it, or the secretary or another member, may be asked to give this information at the next meeting. Possibly an earlier item on the agenda has been left in a similar way. The secretary makes a note of such items and on the agenda for the next meeting will appear the item 'Business arising out of the last meeting.' This will usually have the second place on the agenda, the first being 'To receive the minutes of the last meeting,' or some similar phrase 'To approve the minutes of the last meeting.'

A Quorum Present

In the rules for the meetings of public bodies, the committees of societies, clubs and associations, there is almost invariably a statement fixing the number of members who must be present at any meeting. Otherwise the meeting would not be representative and decisions contrary to the wishes of the majority might be made. Usually an exact number is stated in the rules, but it may also be a proportion of the actual number of members. If a quorum is not present the meeting must be adjourned until the required number is there.

Reading the Minutes

The minutes are the record of a meeting prepared by the secretary. In some ways the office of secretary may be as important as that of chairman, though the secretary must avoid any suggestion of being important! He is there as the servant of the body which elected him, the friend and guide on points of procedure, never obtruding his views in the meeting unless asked to do so. What he may do, tactfully and discreetly, before the meeting is a matter for his own judgment. At the meeting he takes a full note of the proceedings and later prepares the minutes. It is usual to submit the draft of these minutes to the chairman as soon as prepared. In certain cases it may be desirable to consult other members about the minutes.

These minutes should be a factual record giving the decisions. It depends on the nature of the meeting how much is recorded of the actual discussions. Where representatives of various bodies form the meeting it may be desirable to record the different points of view. In other cases it may only be necessary to record that 'after some discussion the motion was carried unanimously.'

After the opening of the meeting the chairman calls on the secretary to read the minutes. Having done so, the meeting is called on to approve them. The minutes should then be signed by the chairman, the book being passed to him by the secretary.

Proposed and Seconded

The chairman then passes on to the next item on the agenda: 'Business arising from the last meeting.' The nature of this business has been stated in the minutes just read and a report may now be made by the member in whose hands it was left. Some discussion may then take place, but, assuming that everything is straightforward, one member will then rise and say, 'I propose that the offer . . . be accepted.' This motion must be seconded by another member: 'I second the motion, Mr Chairman.' All speeches and remarks are, of course, addressed to the Chair.

The chairman then puts the motion to the meeting: 'It is proposed and seconded "That the offer . . . be accepted." All those in favour?' Those in favour then put up a hand. 'Any against?' and if no hands are raised the chairman announces 'The motion is carried.' The secretary records this, using the exact words of the motion in his minutes.

Rules of Debate

In a small meeting the rules of debate are often ignored in a general discussion, sometimes with ill results. In more important meetings the chairman must keep the discussion within bounds. Thus a member can only speak once during the debate on a motion—apart from the mover and seconder of a motion. The speaker who proposed the motion has the right to reply at the end of the debate, even though he spoke at some length in the opening. The seconder of the motion may be content to say 'I support (or second) the motion' and can then make his speech later. A member who has already spoken may, with the chairman's permission, rise to explain some point on which he has obviously been misunderstood, but he must not go beyond the brief explanation on that particular point.

Interruptions during a member's speech are bad form but cannot always be prevented. There are certain occasions when they may be permissible. In that case the member rises and addresses the chair, saying, 'I rise to a point of order, Mr Chairman,' and states his case briefly: the rules of the society are being broken by certain statements made by the speaker; the speaker is not dealing with the subject under discussion but is raising other matters which have no bearing on the motion; or unparliamentary language has been used. Apart from these, there is rarely any justification for interrupting a speaker. The chairman must deal with questions arising on points of order according to his discretion. So much depends on the circumstances and on the personalities involved that no rules can be laid down to cover every circumstance, even though there are rules in the standing orders dealing with certain breaches of order. One rule is very definite, however: when the chairman is speaking no one else can be permitted to speak.

Moving an Amendment

A member or members may wish to alter or improve a motion and this can be done in several ways: (a) by striking out words; (b) by inserting words; (c) by striking out some words and inserting others; (d) by adding words to the motion; or (e) by striking out all the words after the first word ('That') and substituting other words dealing with the same subject.

An amendment is dealt with as a motion. It must be moved and seconded and can then be debated. The mover and seconder of the amendment must not have spoken on the original motion but any other member can speak, even if he has already spoken on the original motion. Usually a vote is taken on the amendment since, if it is agreed, the original motion is amended and the final vote will be taken on the amended motion. The altered or revised motion is put to the meeting by the chairman and a vote taken, normally by a show of hands. The chairman then declares that the motion is carried—unless, of course, the voting has been against it, in which case the chairman declares that the motion has been lost. If carried, the motion becomes a resolution of the meeting. Whatever the result the chairman then proceeds to the next item on the agenda or order paper.

The rules of debate outlined above are those usually observed by important public bodies, societies or institutions where a fairly large number of persons are present many of whom may desire to speak. A speaker must rise in his place and receive some indication from the chairman, if several others have risen at the same time, that he has 'caught the chairman's eye' and has permission to speak. The other would-be speakers must then resume their seats and wait for the next opportunity.

In a smaller and less formal meeting such as the committee meetings of smaller societies and clubs, the rules of debate are a useful guide, but need not be followed in detail.

44. GLOSSARY OF BUSINESS TERMS

Above Par. When stocks and shares are quoted at a price above their nominal value they are said to be at a premium or above par.

Acceptance of a Bill. When the drawee of a Bill of Exchange writes his name across the face of it he indicates that he will pay it when due.

Acceptance Supra Protest. If a Bill of Exchange has been protested and is then accepted by another person in order to save the credit of the drawer, it is known as an acceptance supra protest.

Account Current. An account of transactions which have taken place between two parties, made out in debit and credit form, and covering an agreed period of time, usually at the end of some particular commercial venture in which the two have been engaged.

Account Days. On the Stock Exchange there are normally two account days each month and on these days the bargains entered into by members of the Exchange are settled.

Account Sales (A/S): A statement which sets out the details of gross proceeds with deductions for freight, commission and any other charges incurred. If the goods have been sold at a public auction the account sets forth the weight of the goods, price obtained and gives the net proceeds of the sale less all expenses and commission.

Acquittance. A full discharge of a contract, debt or liability, stated in writing.

Act of God. A term used in shipping documents to cover the dangers and perils of the sea which are outside human control. A vessel which is struck by lightning and disabled, or is caught by a sudden storm and founders, despite the fact that it was known to be seaworthy and ably commanded and manned, has suffered such misfortunes by 'Act of God.'

Actuary. One who makes calculations in connection with insurance which regulate the premiums to be charged for the various classes of insurance.

Adjudication Order. An order made on a creditors' petition, or in some cases upon an application by a debtor himself, declaring a particular person to be bankrupt. His estate can then be vested in a trustee and wound up for the benefit of the creditors. Following a creditors' petition a public examination is made by the Court into the causes of the insolvency of the debtor.

Administration Order. In the case of a small bankruptcy where the total value of the estate is unlikely to exceed £300, an Administration Order may be made by the Court for the summary administration of the estate.

Ad Referendum Contract. A contract signed for the purchase or sale of specified goods, but with a proviso that certain minor points are to be settled later.

Ad Valorem (A/V). According to value. Stamp duties and Customs duties charged in proportion to the value of the subject taxed, without reference to weight or quantity.

Advance Freight. Freight payable before a voyage begins.

Advance Note. A draft, usually payable three days after the ship has sailed by the owners of a ship, issued by the captain to seamen on signing the Articles. These drafts enable sailors to make provision for dependants while at sea.

Advice Note. A letter or note giving the receiver information about the dispatch of goods, payment of accounts or of a transaction carried out on his behalf.

After Date. A Bill of Exchange is normally drawn to be payable at a certain period after the date of the Bill.

After Sight. When a Bill of Exchange is drawn after sight, the acceptor must insert the date of his acceptance so that the holder of the Bill knows when it becomes payable.

Age Admitted. Endorsement on a Life Assurance Policy indicating that the insured person has shown his Birth Certificate or given other satisfactory proof of his age.

Agenda. A list of the business for a meeting.

Agent. See Legal Glossary.

Agent de Change. French stockbroker; member of the Paris Bourse.

Allotment. The number of shares in a public company granted to persons who have applied for them and paid the required deposit per share.

All-Round Price. The full price, including all items which would normally be regarded as extras over the basic price.

Amalgamation. Joining together of two or more business concerns.

Amortization. To wipe out a liability by means of a sinking fund, or spreading over a period of years the depreciation in value of assets.

Amortisement. Writing down or reduction of stock.

Arbitrage. Buying stocks and shares in one market and selling them in another, in the hope of making a profit.

Arbitration. Settlement of a dispute by agreeing to accept the judgment of one or more neutral persons, called the Arbitrator(s).

Articles of Association. See Legal Glossary.

At Sight. A Bill of Exchange drawn 'at sight' is payable on demand and does not require accepting.

Average. Term used in marine insurance for adjusting the proportion of loss sustained by different insurers. An Average Adjuster is an expert who prepares the statement of such averages so that the underwriters can make the adjustments.

Back Freight. Amounts payable by the different cargo owners when a vessel is unable to deliver at the port named and the vessel has to return to the loading port.

Bailiff. An agent or land-steward; a sheriff's officer; a person officially authorized to distrain for rent.

Balance of Trade. The balance between the money value of imports and exports.

Balance Sheet. A statement showing the assets and liabilities of any undertaking.

Ballast. A ship sails in ballast when, having insufficient cargo, shingle, gravel, stone etc. is put in the hold to keep the vessel steady. The word ballast is also used for the sand or gravel laid between railway sleepers.

Banker's Order. A written order to a bank to make a payment or series of payments on a customer's behalf. It requires a two penny stamp.

Bank Rate. Minimum rate at which the Bank of England will discount approved Bills of Exchange. It is regulated by the Bank directors at their weekly meeting, according to the demand for advances, etc.

Bankrupt. A person unable to pay his creditors in full and has been adjudged a bankrupt by the Court. The whole of his estate has to be surrendered for the payment of his creditors as far as possible.

Barratry. Wrongful act committed by the master or crew of a vessel which is prejudicial to the owner or charterer.

Bear. One who sells stocks or shares which he does not possess in the expectation that he will be able to buy them at a lower price before the date on which he must deliver them arrives, thus making a profit on the transaction. A 'Bear' is one who sells because he believes there will be a fall in price; a 'Bull' is one who buys shares believing they will rise in price and he can sell at a profit before the date on which he must pay for those bought.

Bedaux System. A scheme whereby a bonus on wages is given for a higher output.

Bill of Exchange (B/E). See Legal Glossary.

Bill of Health. On leaving a port considered liable to infectious diseases the captain of a vessel obtains a certificate from the consul or other authority. This gives the position then obtaining. A Clean Bill means that no contagious disease exists; a Suspected Bill means that there are suspicions regarding contagious diseases; a Foul Bill (or the absence of a Clean or Suspected Bill) that the port was not free from such diseases, in which case the vessel will be in quarantine at the next port.

Bill of Lading (B/L). See Legal Glossary.

Bill of Sight. In cases where the consignee is not certain what goods have been sent to him, a temporary form of entry is used at the Custom House, permitting them to be landed and examined.

Blue Peter. A flag with a white square in the middle of a blue ground, hoisted when a vessel is about to leave port.

Board Wages. A money allowance given in lieu of the food normally provided.

Bond. A deed which binds a person to pay a sum of money at a stated time, or under certain conditions.

Bonded Goods. Imported goods, liable to duty, deposited in a Bonded Warehouse until duty is paid upon them. A bond has been signed by the owners that duty will be paid when the goods are taken out until when they are said to be 'In Bond.'

Bonded Stores. Dutiable goods intended for consumption on board a vessel. The Customs permit these to be removed from the warehouses free of duty.

Bottomry Bond. A bond given by a borrower pledging the keel or bottom of his vessel as security for repayment. If the boat is lost the lender loses his money.

Broker. An intermediate agent between buyers and sellers of any commodity. The qualifying name indicates the nature of the commodity: Stockbroker; Cotton Broker; Metal Broker; etc.

Bucket Shop. Slang term applied to doubtful firms dealing in stocks and shares. They are outside firms and not members of the Stock Exchange.

Bulk Cargo. Cargo which is not in separate bags or bales, usually all one commodity such as wheat or oil.

Bull. One who buys shares to sell at a higher price before settling day. See Bear.

Cash Against Documents. Documents entitling a person to the possession of goods will not be handed over until the amount due is paid for them.

Certified Transfer. A transfer deed bearing an endorsement by the company stating that share certificates to meet the transfer have been lodged at the company's office.

Charter-Party. A contract made by the owners of a ship and the charterer for hiring a vessel, or part of her, for a certain period or voyage on terms agreed between them. If for a single voyage it is a 'voyage charter'; for a period it is a 'time-charter.'

Cheque (Chq.). A written order, bearing a twopenny stamp, upon a banker for the payment of money. If made payable to a certain person or order, it must be endorsed by the payee before presenting it for payment. Cheques may be 'crossed' in various ways to ensure that payment is only made through the bank to the right person. Bearer cheques do not require endorsing; if uncrossed, both bearer and order cheques are payable on presentation.

Clearing. A clerk from each of the clearing banks attends the Bankers' Clearing House with cheques and Bills upon other banks and distributes them to the different desks allotted to the several banks. Each clerk then makes out a balance sheet, entering on the debit side the sum each bank owes him, and on the credit side the amount he owes each bank. The balance due to each bank is thus ascertained and the differences settled by cheques on the Bank of England.

Collateral Security. Term applied to documents deposited so that they may be available in the event of failure to repay a loan.

Composition. A payment of so much in the £ by a person who is insolvent or bankrupt instead of the full amount owing.

Half-Commission Man. A person who is neither a broker nor a jobber on the Stock Exchange but introduces business to a broker and receives a half-share of the commission.

Hall-Marks. Official marks stamped on gold and silver articles at Assay Offices in Britain provided they are of the standard required. Each article is stamped with four marks: the hall-mark of the Assay Office; the standard mark showing the fineness; the maker's initials; the date mark (a letter of the alphabet in a shield). The Assay Offices are in London (Goldsmith's Hall) and the hall-mark is a leopard's head; Birmingham, an anchor; Chester, City Arms; Sheffield, a crown; Edinburgh, a castle; Glasgow, tree, salmon, bell, bird and ring. Assay Offices at Bristol, Exeter, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Norwich and York have long been closed.

Hammered. A Stock Exchange term applied to a member who is unable to meet his commitments. A brief announcement is made in the 'House' after three blows have been struck with a mallet on the rostrum. The name of the defaulting member is then posted on a board and he ceases to be a member.

Hidden Reserve. A reserve which is not disclosed by the balance sheet. It may be created by putting the value of property at the price originally paid though it has considerably increased since then, or in various other ways.

High-geared Capital. If a company's capital is divided into £750,000 5 per cent. Preference shares and only £100,000 Ordinary shares, it might be termed high-geared as the proportion of fixed interest shares to shares which draw dividends in accordance with profits is high. If the proportion of ordinary shares is high in comparison with the Preference shares, the company would have a low-geared capital.

High Seas. Every country has sovereignty over the seas bordering its coasts up to a certain distance from the shore. These are its territorial waters, and all beyond are the High Seas, free to all nations. Usually a limit of three miles off the shore is recognized as territorial waters.

Hypothecation. Pledging documents which convey a right to property: a mortgage, bottomry bond, bill of sale etc., but the owner retains possession of the property pledged as security.

48. FIRST AID IN THE HOME

First Aid is the help and assistance given to an injured person, or to anyone taken suddenly ill before the arrival of a doctor. First Aid also includes the treatment of minor accidents in which the services of a doctor or trained nurse are unnecessary but some simple treatment is immediately desirable to ease pain or prevent an injury from becoming worse.

Lectures and courses in First Aid are given by the Red Cross Society and St John's Ambulance Association and other bodies in most towns throughout the country. Even if you have never taken such a course, a little knowledge may be of great value.

Serious Accidents

In the case of serious accidents one of the first things to be done is to send someone for a doctor or a trained nurse. All that the First Aider, unless very skilled, should attempt in such circumstances is the least that is necessary. Generally speaking, the patient should be moved as little as possible until skilled help arrives. This applies particularly when there has been a fall and bones may have been broken. In such cases, as in many others, treat the patient for shock.

Any accident causes shock to some extent. If you are sure there is no fracture, lay the patient flat with head to one side and keep him warm with blankets, rugs or a coat. If there is no sign or suspicion of internal bleeding give the patient hot drinks, such as sweetened tea or coffee. See that clothing at the neck and waist is loosened and that there is plenty of air.

One other important point: except in certain cases, mentioned under the headings that follow, do not apply wet dressings, especially if the case will soon be under medical care. Special treatments which are now available make it essential that the doctor should decide what kind of dressing is to be applied.

Abrasions or Grazes

Wash your hands thoroughly, then expose the injured part. Protect the injury with a clean handkerchief and carefully cleanse the skin round the abrasion with soap and clean water (preferably boiled and cooled), taking care not to touch the injured part with your fingers and not to let water run over it. Then dry and apply a clean dressing.

Bites and Stings

The common bite in the home is usually from a dog. Put on a dry dressing and send the patient to a doctor. For stings from an insect or plant apply methylated spirit, weak ammonia or bicarbonate of soda to the bite or sting. For a bee sting, which is acid, apply dilute ammonia (one part in four parts of water) or soda (a teaspoonful of bicarb in a cup of water). A wasp sting is alkaline, and vinegar, lemon or onion, applied immediately, will help. If the sting is in or near the mouth, get the patient to a doctor as soon as possible.

Bleeding

A little bleeding from a cut will do no harm. Apply pressure with a clean finger and then put on a gauze pad and bandage firmly over bleeding point. For nose bleeding, bathe the bridge of the nose with cold water; let the patient sit up with head erect or slightly forward and tell him to pinch the nose firmly for five minutes. A cold compress may be applied. Tell the patient to breathe through the mouth and not to blow the nose.

For more serious external bleeding, lay the patient flat and keep warm; if the wound is on a leg, raise the leg by gently propping something under the foot (providing there is no suspicion of a fracture). If the bleeding point is free from any foreign body apply direct pressure with clean finger or dressing, then apply a gauze pad and bandage firmly over the bleeding point.

If there is internal bleeding, don't give anything to eat or drink and get the patient to hospital as soon as possible.

Bruises

Bathe the injured part in cold water, then apply cold compress and bandage. (Note: A cold compress is a piece of lint or a handkerchief folded several times, soaked in cold water and wrung out until it does not drip. Change frequently to keep it cold and wet.)

Burns and Scalds

If the burn or scald is severe or extensive, wrap up the patient to maintain warmth and take to hospital as quickly as possible. Do not remove clothing unless soaked with petrol or corrosive. In less urgent cases treat for shock and exclude air or germs by putting on dry sterile dressings or lint. If the burn is comparatively small and the doctor has not been called immediately, it can be bathed in a solution of bicarbonate of soda (dessertspoonful to a pint of water). Otherwise use only a dry dressing (to exclude air) until the doctor or nurse arrives.

Never open a burn blister and never attempt to remove blistered skin.

In the case of acid burns, bathe with bicarbonate of soda solution.

If a person's clothes catch fire, prevent her from running out and smother the flames by wrapping her in some heavy material such as a rug, overcoat, heavy tablecloth or blanket.

For a scalded throat due to drinking too hot fluid give sips of a very weak solution of bicarbonate, or an ordinary cold drink.

In all cases of burns and scalds treat for shock as far as possible and, except in very minor cases, call or see the doctor.

Choking

Bend the child's head and shoulders well forward and downwards and thump between the shoulder blades. If this fails to dislodge the obstruction at once, hook it out with the forefinger or make the patient sick by tickling the back of the throat with the finger.

Eye

Black Eye: Apply cold compress and bandage.

Foreign Body in Eye: Turn the lower lid down, and, if the foreign body is seen, remove with the corner of a soft handkerchief. If not seen, pull upper lid forward and slide lower lid under it. If this does not remove the object, submerge the eye in a basin of clean water and tell the patient to blink his eyelids rapidly. After this, whether the particle has come out or not, put a drop of castor oil in the eye. If after a short time the pain continues, cover the eye with a bandage and take the patient to the doctor.

Fainting

Loosen clothing at neck, chest and waist. Either put the patient's head between his knees, or lay him flat if he has completely lost consciousness. Make sure that there is plenty of fresh air, but keep the body warm. Sprinkle cold water on the face and hold smelling salts to nose (but don't overdo this). When the patient recovers consciousness, gradually raise him and give sips of water, tea or coffee, or half a teaspoonful of sal volatile in a cupful of water.

Fits

In all cases remove the patient from any danger. If a child, the fit or convulsion may be due to teething, or undigested food, or sudden fright. The child becomes stiff, arches the back and rolls up the eyes, showing only the whites.

Send for the doctor then undress the child, put in a warm bath and apply a cold sponge to the head. Dry and wrap the child in warm blankets and put to bed with covered hot water bottle.

In a convulsive fit in an older person, lay the patient down with head to one side and insert a gag (a knotted handkerchief or pencil covered with handkerchief) between the teeth. But never force the jaws apart. In another type of fit the patient is flushed. Lay him down with head raised and to one side. Loosen clothing and allow plenty of fresh air, but keep the body warm and give nothing to eat or drink. In all cases of this kind the doctor should be sent for as soon as possible.

Fractures

A fracture is a broken bone. Where a break has occurred there will be considerable swelling. Probably the patient will be unable to move the limb and will tell you so. Stop any bleeding by applying pad and bandage, but move the patient as little as possible. Cover the patient up and treat for shock, but do not give anything to eat or drink, except a few sips of tea or coffee, at most, in case an anaesthetic may be necessary when the patient reaches hospital. A skilled First Aider will know what splints and bandages to use, but the unskilled may do more harm than good by attempting such treatment. In any case get the doctor or ambulance men as soon as possible.

Poisoning

If a child has eaten poisonous berries make him sick to get the poison out of his system as quickly as possible. Tickle the back of his throat with your finger, or give an emetic—two tablespoonfuls of salt in a glass of warm water, repeated frequently. Keep the bowl and contents in which the patient has been sick for the doctor to examine.

In all cases of poisoning send for the doctor or get the case to hospital as early as possible.

Before help comes, however, whether it is a child or older patient, give drinks of water, milk or weak tea.

If there are signs round the lips or mouth of stains or burns indicating that a corrosive poison (strong acid or alkali) has been taken, do not attempt to make the patient sick but drinks of water, milk or weak tea can be given so long as the patient is conscious. These are, of course, merely temporary measures until the doctor arrives or the patient can be taken to hospital.

Sprains and Strains

A sprain is a stretching of the ligaments round a joint, usually caused by slipping. There is pain, swelling and bruising.

A strain is due to overstretching a muscle when lifting weights or severe exertion in games. There is usually swelling and pain on moving the injured part.

If an ankle, it is better not to remove the shoe or boot unless the swelling is considerable. Apply a cold compress firmly (see under 'Bruises') and transport the patient to see a doctor. The injured limb should be kept immobile.

Sunstroke and Heatstroke

This is usually due to hard work or play in the sun or great heat. The skin is hot, face flushed, bounding pulse and high temperature. The first thing is to remove the patient to a cool, shady spot, lay flat and loosen clothes. Sponge down with cold water, first the head and neck, then remove some of the clothing and sponge or sprinkle the limbs and chest with water. Fan to help the evaporation of water and afterwards cover with a dry towel.

When fully conscious, give plenty of water to drink, adding a saltspoonful of salt to each tumbler of water. In some cases the body temperature is normal or even lower. Treat for shock, i.e., keep the patient warm and give hot sweetened tea or coffee. In most cases of sunstroke or heatstroke, get the patient to hospital or obtain medical aid as soon as possible, but meantime give First Aid as indicated.

In the Cupboard

In the First Aid cupboard at home always have a few sterile dry dressings; a supply of roller bandaging, 1 and 2 in. wide; a 1-in. wide spool of adhesive plaster; a supply of adhesive wound dressings for small cuts and wounds; a packet of cotton-wool; small bottle of antiseptic (Dettol or similar preparation); 4-oz. tin of bicarbonate of soda; small bottle of castor oil for use as eye drops; 2-oz. bottle of sal volatile; bottle of smelling salts; tube of collodion (Portex) as an antiseptic cover for small wounds and to ease the pain of stings.

49. YOUR HOT-WATER SYSTEM

Domestic hot-water systems operate on the thermo-syphon principle. Heated water expands, decreases in density and therefore rises to be displaced by colder water.

For this reason the boiler is placed at the lowest point of the system. Water after being heated ascends the flow pipe (see Fig. 1) and is stored in a closed hot-water tank or cylinder, from which it is drawn off to supply wash-basins, baths, etc. Water which is consumed is replaced by cold water from a storage tank, which is often directly above the hot-water cylinder and usually in the roof. The advantage of having the supply tank in the roof is that a good pressure or 'head' of water is available. The chief drawback to this position, however, is its exposure to frost, and in this respect a tank just below the ceiling is in every way superior. The boiler may be an independent unit or may be incorporated in an open fire or in a kitchen range.

Faults and Failures

A sudden failure of the system is a rare occurrence, but a gradual fall in efficiency may occur due to 'furring' of the pipes in hard-water areas. Allowing the water to boil due to maintaining too fierce a fire will hasten the formation of fur. These deposits form chiefly in the boiler and flow pipe. Fig. 2 shows how the accumulation of fur or scale can obstruct the circulation of the water on which the operation of the system depends.

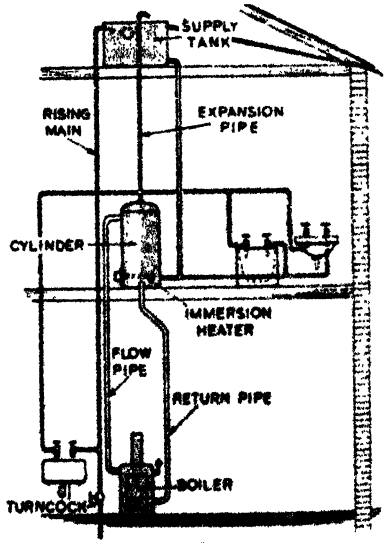

FIG. 1.—General arrangement of hot and cold water supply.

Descaling can be carried out either by the plumber or by one of the specialist firms who use a chemical process.

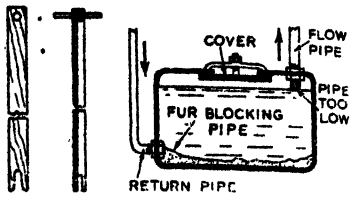

FIG. 2.—Improvised tools for operating turncock below ground (left). Diagram showing boiler defects.

Air Locks

After draining the hot-water system, and also sometimes for an unaccountable reason, an air lock may occur so that no water will flow when one or more of the taps is turned on. This can usually be remedied by injecting water into the system to replace the air. Connect a short length of rubber hose from the hot tap to the adjacent cold tap and turn on both taps. After a few minutes turn off the cold tap and disconnect the hose. The hot-water tap should then flow normally.

Boiler Noises

In some cases rumbling and thumping noises occur when the water is very hot. This is due to steam collecting in the boiler and being released suddenly up the flow pipe. Drawing off some hot water will stop the noise, which sounds alarming but is not dangerous. This fault is caused by the flow pipe projecting too far into the boiler, as shown in Fig. 2. A plumber will overcome this by making a new joint.

Boiling with its attendant noises can occur in the boiler even when the water in the cylinder is not hot. This can be caused by an obstruction due to fur or to a badly planned system. Often it is impossible to avoid running the flow and return pipes horizontally for part of their course as when the storage tank is not directly over the boiler. The horizontal sections should, however, have a rise from the boiler to tank direction of at least ¼ in. per foot length of pipe so that the hot water is always rising and in the case of the return pipe the cold water is falling.

Prevention of Freezing

If the supply tank is in the roof it should be encased in a box 3 in. larger all round than the tank, with the intervening space filled with sawdust. There should be a wooden lid covered with straw, sacking or newspaper and all pipes should be bound with felt or similarly protected.

The Turncock

A freeze-up may often be prevented by turning off the main turncock at night and turning on the cold-water tap in the kitchen. This will drain the rising main in a few seconds. The water must be turned on again in the morning to replenish the tank. The hot-water system must not be used with the cold-water tank empty or the results may be disastrous.

The turncock is usually under the kitchen sink, but sometimes in the garden about 2 ft. below ground. Ascertain its position in case of an emergency. If below ground, a prepared length of iron pipe or hardwood stick, as shown in Fig. 2, should be constructed for turning the cock on or off.

Immersion Heaters

Immersion heaters are particularly useful in hot weather when fires are not needed or t supplement the heating in very cold weather.

They are fitted near the bottom of the hot water tank and should be thermostatically controlled so that the electricity is cut off automatically when the water reaches a predetermined temperature. If an immersion heater is used exclusively and set to operate at 140° F. furring of the pipes will be negligible.

50. HOUSEHOLD EMERGENCIES

Many household emergencies would never arise if precautionary action were taken; therefore, the necessary preventive measures will be explained in addition to remedial action to be employed when the emergency actually occurs.

Electricity Failures

Minor emergencies may arise by the 'blowing' of a fuse. A useful precaution against unnecessary delay in restoring the service is to place on top of the electricity meter one of those screwdrivers made for the purpose which contain fuse wire in the handle.

Before attempting to repair a fuse, switch off the current. Some fuse boxes incorporate a switch which must be switched off before the box can be opened.

Then endeavour to find the cause of the failure, otherwise the wire may fuse again as soon as renewed. Examine lamps or other apparatus in use at the time of the failure. Flex which has perished where it enters a lamp-holder is a likely cause.

Chimney Fires

A clean chimney does not catch alight. But sweeping once every season may not be sufficient if smoky coal or wood fires are used. If the soot does ignite, first of all put out the fire in the grate. For this purpose salt is very effective. If salt is not available, use sand or earth in preference to water and so avoid unnecessary mess. If there is a plate at the base of the chimney it may be sufficient to close this and so starve the fire of oxygen.

In the early stages, a chimney fire can be successfully dealt with by a hand fire extinguisher. One employing a liquid which is a non-conductor of electricity is a worthwhile investment as it has many applications.

If a chimney fire does not yield immediately to home treatment, telephone the fire service. A chimney fire should not be allowed to burn itself out. Apart from the danger of falling sparks and burning soot the ceiling joists may kindle in old or badly designed houses.

Blocked Waste Pipes

If the waste pipe from the bath or sink is frozen, drain all water from the trap (see Fig. 2). Replace the plug and fill the waste pipe with hot strong brine.

Obstructions other than ice can usually be dislodged by first examining the trap and if the blockage is elsewhere by using a suction cup as shown in Fig. 2. Partly fill the sink or basin with water and pump the cup up and down over the outlet. The overflow opening will have to be stuffed with wet rags at the same time or the pressure of the pumping action will be lost.

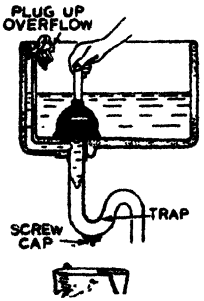

FIG. 2.—How to use a suction cup to clear a blocked waste pipe.

Gas Escapes

Most gas authorities warn householders to notify gas leaks as soon as they occur and special services are provided for dealing promptly with such escapes. Small leaks, if accessible, can be stopped temporarily with chewing gum, soap, adhesive tape, putty or cellulose cement.

With large escapes, turn off the supply immediately. If there is a strong smell of gas do not look for the cause with a naked flame. Shut off any gas jets which may be burning in the vicinity.

Frozen Water Supply

Preventive measures are given under 'Your Hot-Water System.' Unfortunately the first indication that the supply is frozen frequently occurs only when the water in the cistern has been used up; thus the user may continue to draw off water for some hours after the main supply has ceased.

If, therefore, the cold water supply stops or becomes erratic, the tank in the roof should be inspected. If this is empty or frozen at the bottom, the water heating must be discontinued immediately. If only the ball valve is frozen this can be thawed out with rags dipped in very hot water. Further freezing should be prevented by placing a car radiator heater, electric 'black heat' element or other safety type heater in the roof.

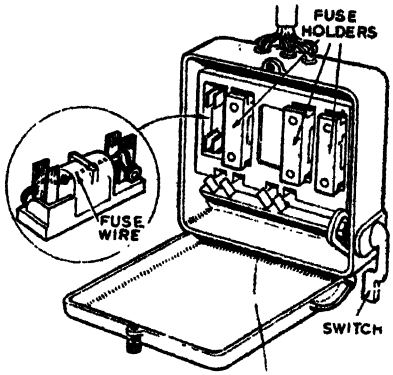

FIG. 1.—A typical fuse box. With this pattern it is not possible to open the box until the switch has been moved to the 'off' position.

Burst Pipes

These do not reveal themselves until they thaw. One most vulnerable point in the system is the rising main where it passes just under the roof to connect with the cold water cistern. A leak here is usually first revealed by water coming through the ceiling. The turncock (see 'Your Hot-Water System') must be shut off immediately.

Until the plumber arrives the rest of the system may safely be used if there is still water in the storage tank. If the leak does not stop after turning off the main supply, then it must be other than from the rising main and the whole system should be drained by turning on all taps after extinguishing the fire or switching off the immersion heater. Do not forget to collect water in kettles and pails for use until repairs can be effected.

A burst in a lead pipe can be temporarily plugged by tapping the surrounding lead gently with a hammer towards the crack so as to fill it up.

Going on Holiday

Before finally leaving home, make a last-minute check. Have the usual services (milk, papers etc.) been cancelled? Are gas and electricity turned off at the main? Is the water supply turned off? Are all taps turned off? Have all doors and windows been closed and securely fastened? It is advisable to give your holiday address to a friend or neighbour just in case of some emergency, e.g. fire, during your absence. Many people notify the police when their home is being left unoccupied and this insures that someone keeps a friendly eye on the property.

51. READING GAS AND ELECTRICITY METERS

The somewhat formidable array of dials on the gas meter is, in fact, quite simple to understand. Firstly, the two top dials (Fig. 1) should be ignored altogether. Then commencing with the dial on the extreme left, write down the smaller of the two numbers between which the hand is pointing (with the exception that if it lies between 9 and 0 the figure to record is 9). In this instance the figure is 3. Then proceed to the next dial. Here the hand is between 5 and 6, therefore write down 5 after the 3 already recorded. The figures for the third and fourth dials are written down in the same way, noting that as the hand of the third lies between 9 and 0 the reading is 9.

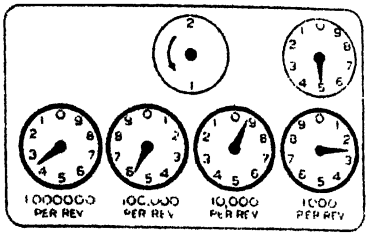

FIG. 1.—Gas consumed is here shown as 3592. This is in hundreds of cubic feet, the top dials being disregarded.

The final reading in the example shown, therefore, is 3592. This number gives the consumption of gas in hundreds of cubic feet and it will be found that a four-figure number similar to this will be shown on the account submitted by the Gas Board. It will be entered under the heading of Meter reading in hundreds of cu. ft. A second heading Previous reading will give the number recorded at the end of the previous quarter. The difference between the two sets of numbers shows the current quarter's consumption of gas.

Fig. 2 shows the arrangement of dials on an electricity meter. In this case the dials marked $\frac{1}{10}$ and $\frac{1}{100}$ must be ignored. Then record the figures for each dial in turn starting from the left as with the gas meter dials. When the pointer is between two figures put down the lesser. When between 9 and 0 put down 9. The reading shown in Fig. 2 is 4946 units of electricity.

If one of the hands appears to be exactly on a figure, say 5, as on the first dial in Fig. 2, look at the following dial. If the hand is between 9 and 0 write down 4. But if the following dial reads between 0 and 1 write down 5. In this case the answer is 4.

Fig. 3 shows another arrangement of dials found on electricity meters. These are read in exactly the same manner but record up to tens of thousands instead of up to thousands of units. The reading shown here is 13595, the dial marked in tenths being disregarded.

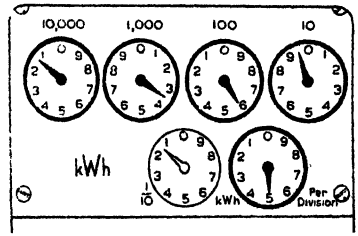

FIG. 3.—Another arrangements of dials. These record up to five figures showing 13595 units. The dial marked $\frac{1}{10}$ is not recorded.

52. INDOOR PLANTS

The true house plant is one which can be grown permanently in a room. For this reason it usually has decorative foliage and is not expected to flower. Few flowering plants can be kept permanently in rooms, or be persuaded to come into bloom in such conditions. The needs of the foliage plants are given below.

Temperature and Humidity

Many plants will stand a great range of temperature, though they need protection from frost, and it is best to avoid a high temperature by day and a low one at night. But the air humidity must be adequate throughout the temperature range: dry air is very bad for plants. Now, the amount of moisture which air absorbs increases as temperature rises. Thus, given the same amount of moisture, air in a cool room is relatively more humid than that in a hot room.

If plants are to be grown in fairly high temperatures, they must either be chosen for their dry-air resistance, or means of improving the local humidity must be provided. The simplest way is to stand the pots on a tray of pebbles or grit which is kept damp, or to use a trough-shaped container and plunge the pots in peat or sphagnum moss kept moist. The water evaporates steadily and provides air humidity around the foliage.

Ventilation
Stuffiness should be avoided, and fresh air given when the weather is not too cold. However, nothing kills a plant quicker than a draught. Hot, dry air rising from fires or radiators is almost as harmful.

Watering
Plants often receive far too much water, resulting in stagnant, airless soil in which the roots rot. The aim should be to prevent the soil from ever drying right out; when the soil starts to become dry, give a thorough watering. Never water in continual driblets, nor allow plants to stand in water-filled saucers. Avoidance of sodden soil is especially important in winter, when plants are hardly growing. In summer, plants will need watering two or three times a week, and an occasional soaking of the whole pot is beneficial.

Cleaning
Especially in towns, where industrial fumes contribute to the dust, it is advisable to wash plants occasionally. Apart from its dirty appearance, dust clogs the breathing pores and reduces the amount of light reaching the leaves. Plants may be syringed with, or dipped in, tepid soapy water, and then rinsed with clear water; those which cannot be moved should be gently sponged.

Light
Many house plants do not enjoy too much direct sunlight, but few will stand deep shade. For most a good indirect light is desirable, which is improved by light-coloured walls. Spindly growth and production of abnormally small foliage are signs of lack of light.

Repotting and Feeding
It is seldom necessary to repot, or feed, a plant for a year or even two after purchase. Eventually the pot becomes filled with roots and a shift into a slightly larger pot is desirable. This is best done in late spring or early summer. A good soil recipe is two parts fibrous, peaty soil, two parts rotted leaf mould and one part sharp sand. Alternatively the standardized John Innes No. 1 Potting Compost can be used, with the addition of one to two parts well-moistened granulated peat, or leaf mould if available, to every three parts compost. Crock the pots well for good drainage.

It is quite possible to keep a plant in the same pot for many years, if fed during the growing season. Use a balanced fertilizer, preferably one to be applied as a weak solution; follow the maker's instructions. Once every three or four weeks in the summer should be ample; excessive feeding can result in weak growth and scorched foliage. Plants newly repotted into rich compost should not be fed.

A plant will show its need for repotting, or feeding, by growing slower, by forming leaves smaller than usual, or even by yellowing and dropping of leaves. Badly pot-bound plants will dry out very rapidly.

Acclimatization
While it is remarkable to what conditions many plants will settle down, one must remember that they are grown for sale in warm, humid, equable greenhouse conditions. In winter the difference between this cosy nursery and the arid, fluctuating, draughty conditions of the average British house is very considerable, and the shock may spell ill-health or even death to the plant. Also, the conditions in markets and florists' shops at this season can be very severe, so that the plant may have had its shock even before you buy it. Therefore it is best to buy plants in late spring and summer, when greenhouse and room conditions are reasonably similar, and the plants can acclimatize gradually to the poor winter conditions.

Ailments
House plants do not suffer from fungus diseases, except rarely from mildew, a greyish powdering on the surface due to too much dampness. Rotting can also follow excessive damp. Leaves will, however, often become spotted yellow or brown, or wither at edges or tips, or gradually go yellow, and eventually fall. Such markings are symptoms of faulty culture or conditions, and the grower faced with them must examine his cultivation in the light of the recommendations already made, asking himself if the plant is in a draught, if the air is too dry, if the temperature falls too low at night, if too much water has been given and so on.

Pests
Insect pests may be introduced on new purchases or, in summer, arrive from out of doors. The commonest is the greenfly or aphis, which is easily removed in the regular 'bath' or can be killed with a nicotine or BHC insecticide. It causes yellowing and distortion, especially at the growing point. More insidious is the scale insect, a kind of aphis which settles in one place covered with a waxy scale. This has to be wiped off with a damp cloth. Even more dangerous is the almost invisible red spider mite. If plants go yellow for no apparent reason, look for tiny red spots and a silvery webbing especially on the leaf undersides. If present, spray with derris or soft soap solution, and as a precaution, syringe regularly with clear water.

Plants to Grow
It is wise to see a range of house plants before buying, so that one obtains plants which will contrast well with each other; there are climbing and trailing types as well as bushy, upright and rosette forms. Some are much easier to grow than others, and below is a list of plants recommended to begin with. The code letters indicate the following: C, cool conditions preferred; CL, climbing; R, rosette; T, trailing; S, tolerance of shade.

Araucaria excelsa (Norfolk Island Pine), C, S; Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri, CL or T, S; Billbergia nutans, R; Chlorophytum elatum variegatum, R; Cissus antarctica (Kangaroo vine), CL; Cyrtomium falcatum (Holly fern), C, S; Euonymus radicans variegatum, C, S, T; Fatshedera Lizei; Ficus pumila (Creeping fig), C, CL or T, S; Hedera (Ivies), C, CL, S; Howeia belmoreana (palm), S; Philodendron scandens and others, CL; Rhoicissus rhomboidea (Grape ivy), CL; Tradescantia fluminensis and Zebrina pendula (Wandering Jew), Tr.

Slightly more difficult, but thriving in good average conditions, are Aechmeas, R; other Billbergias, R; Cryptanthus, R; Ficus elastica (Rubber plant); Ficus Benjamina; Sansevieria trifasciata Laurentii (Sword plant); Sparmannia africana (House lime).

Flowering plants. Few plants will flower happily in rooms without special treatment, and very few will do so continuously. Impatiens Holstii and Sultani (Zanzibar balsam), Primula obconica and Campanula isophylla should thrive in a light airy place, at least in summer. Beloperone guttata (Shrimp plant) needs plenty of air humidity. Saintpaulias (African violets) and other hothouse flowers need much air dampness and a temperature of at least 60° F. Clivias (Kaffir lily) will flower annually with little trouble, but do so only for a few weeks.

Florists' plants. The plants grown for the florists' trade are almost impossible to bring to flower in a room, and are therefore normally treated as temporary. They include Astilbe or Spiraea (Goat's beard); *Azalea indica; Calceolaria (Slipper flower); Cineraria; Cyclamen*; Cytisus racemosus (Broom)*; Erica (South African heath)*; Hydrangea; various Primulas, and Solanum Capsicastrum (Winter cherry)*.

All these plants detest dry air and draughts, and if the warm room is arid, they will do better in a cooler one. Standing the pot on pebbles or a block of wood or brick above water, or surrounded with damp moss or peat in a bowl, are useful ways of improving humidity. Water moderately, taking special care with azaleas, which are often potted in pure peat which dries out rapidly.

Astilbe and hydrangea can be planted in the garden after flowering. Those marked * can be kept by the skilful. The rest should be discarded after flowering.

Cacti and Succulents

These popular plants are easily grown indoors, but must have a really sunny place in a south-facing window. In summer they like plenty of water, but in winter practically none if they are in a cool place, and little if they must be kept in a warm room. Protect from frost. Repotting every two years is advised, using three parts John Innes Potting Compost and one part coarse sand or small grit.

53. PETS AND LIVESTOCK

Dogs

On your choice of dog depends the pleasure and companionship you will receive and the happiness of your pet. Large dogs such as Alsatians, Retrievers, Setters, etc., need large kennels and considerable exercise and are not suitable for townsfolk. The medium size, Cocker Spaniels, Boxers, Terriers, Poodles, etc., are happy in any surroundings and can easily be kept in the house. The toy breeds, Pekingese, Pugs, Pomeranians, etc., are ideal for small flats, for they can be treated almost as cats, providing they are given daily walking exercise. The cost of feeding must also be taken into account before deciding on the breed. The Alsatian, for example, will need at least 10 lb. of meat per week, compared with the Cocker's 4 lb. and the Pekingese's 2 lb., in addition to the usual biscuits or meal.

Dog, or bitch, is another problem, and this must be a question of personal preference. A bitch will need protection when she comes into season, every six months, but this worry has largely disappeared by using one of the proprietary preparations now obtainable from chemists or pet shops; these are quite harmless to the bitch. Pedigree, or mongrel, there is nothing to choose between them for loyalty, devotion and intelligence; a mongrel is often the stronger constitutionally, but has not the glamour of the pedigree dog.

Today the average dog sleeps in the home and only needs a wooden box and a good straw bed to be quite happy. The box should be raised a couple of inches off the floor to avoid draughts, and placed in a corner of the room. A large sack loosely filled with straw makes a good mattress, and an old blanket completes the bedding. The mattress should be well shaken every morning; the straw should be replaced once a week. The box should be large enough for the dog to lie down in comfortably without being cramped, yet not too large or it will lose a great deal of warmth. A supply of fresh water must always be available, and it is advisable to purchase one of the round heavy-based bowls, for they are virtually unspillable. Water must be changed every day; indeed, in hot weather this should be done two or three times during the day.

Raw meat should be the basis of a dog's diet and it does not matter whether it is beef or horsemeat, providing that one or the other is always used. It is necessary to supplement the meat with cereals, that is, bread, biscuits or biscuit meal, but vegetables are not needed. Meat and cereals should be used in roughly equal proportions of weight. Variety can be given by feeding the cereals dry or slightly moistened in gravy. When using bread, always bake well and never use white bread under any circumstances. Meals can be given once or twice a day, but regularity is essential. If feeding twice a day, give one-third of the meal early morning and the remainder in the evening.

The following is a rough guide to quantity: dogs weighing up to 10 lb. require about 12 oz. per day, those about 30 lb. will need 24 oz. and larger breeds 36 oz. or more. Common ---se will tell you if the dog is getting too fat, or thin, so regulate his diet accordingly, but do not cut down on the meat allowance.

Regular daily exercise is needed to keep the dog fit and a good sharp walk for five minutes is far better than a gentle stroll round the shops. If an open space, or park, can be used, then take a ball and give the dog five minutes retrieving it from a distance. It is always advisable to have the dog on a lead when walking in the streets, no matter how much it can be trusted. A sudden noise can easily cause it to jump into the road and cause an accident.

All dogs benefit by a daily brush and combing, for this cleans the coat and stimulates healthy growth. Daily exercise, if given on a hard surface, will keep the pads and claws in condition. Eyes should be kept clean by bathing with cotton wool moistened by lukewarm water. Ears should also be cleaned in the same manner at least once a week, but do not probe too deeply.

A word of warning: if the dog seems dull, and there is a discharge from the nose, with watery eyes, consult a veterinary surgeon immediately, for these are the first symptoms of distemper, or hard-pad, a dreadful disease.

Cats

Although there are twenty-six different varieties of cats they divide naturally into two types: the long-haired and the short-haired. In the former we have the Persian and Chinchilla, while the Tabby and Siamese are short-haired; but many breeds have both long- and short-haired varieties. The short-haired cat is the more popular with householders, for it does not shed its hairs so much and is far easier to keep clean. Whether to keep a Tom or a Queen (female) was always a problem, but today it is quite a simple matter to have the male castrated or the female spayed, or what is commonly called 'doctored.' This operation should be performed when the animal is from four to five months old. Such an operation will not affect their subsequent health, but will certainly make them more contented with home life.

A fairly large wooden box placed in a corner free from draughts and shaded from bright lights will make an ideal bed. On the bottom of the box place an old piece of linoleum, then several layers of folded newspapers and then an old blanket. The blanket should be brushed every day, the newspaper destroyed when soiled and the linoleum washed with disinfectant at least once a week. A sanitary pan should always be provided and this should be placed near to the bed and the kitten trained to use it. A cheap baking dish about 10 in. by 8 in. makes an ideal pan, and this should be half filled with peat moss litter, which can easily be burned and does not smell.

Although the cat is the cleanest of animals and is continuously washing itself, it will benefit from a few minutes grooming each day. This will reduce the risk of fleas to a minimum and keep the cat in a much healthier condition by removing all loose hairs and dirt. A brush with bristles of a medium stiffness should be used, and always start by brushing the coat the wrong way, then finish by following the natural lie of the coat. With long-haired varieties, lightly comb the coat before brushing and so open any tangles.

Ears will need regular attention if canker is to be avoided and they should be cleaned at least once a week. A small pad of cotton wool, moistened in lukewarm water, gently rubbed on the inside of the ears will keep them clean.

Eyes will also become dirty, particularly in the corners, and they should be cleaned by a gentle washing with cotton wool and warm water.

Cats have very pronounced views on food and all differ in their likes and dislikes. In general, meat should be the basic food, with fish and tinned cat-food used as a change. Liver, a great delicacy, should not be given more than twice a week. Always provide plenty of fresh water and change it frequently for a cat will not drink dust-covered or dirty water. Milk is always welcome, but it does not remove the necessity of water, which is nature's aperient.

Cage Birds

Care should be taken to see that whatever bird is acquired is healthy, vigorous and free from blemishes and deformities, points to note being brightness of eye, general alertness and good feather condition with an overall impression of well-being. Dull, listless looking specimens with a general air of depression should be avoided. Where birds of the required variety are bred locally, obtain a specimen from a reputable breeder.

As to management, different species require different types of cages, but whatever cage is used, see that it is large enough to allow freedom of movement and do not use cages for Budgerigars or Parrots if the cage wires have been painted, as not only will the appearance of the cage be ruined by the nibbling propensities of these birds, but they may do themselves considerable harm by consuming paint which may contain lead.

Cleanliness is essential, of course. Perches, utensils and cage bottom should be kept scrupulously clean by washing in very hot water and disinfectant, and, in positioning the cage, see that the greatest enemies of small birds, i.e., draughts and damp, are avoided. Do not place the cage in a window where draughts almost always abound and where the sun may cause extreme discomfort through shining through the glass direct on to the bird, but stand it in a light, airy corner of the room. Fumes from gas lights or fires or anything that may bring about a vitiated atmosphere are not conducive to good health.

Whatever food is given—according to variety of bird—should be fresh, sound, clean and wholesome, and the dietary needs of any particular species should be attended to in full.

Poultry

Profitable poultry keeping depends on two main factors:

1. Good stock—buy from a reliable breeder with a reputation to lose, even if it costs you a little extra.
2. Good management—if your birds are comfortable and contented they will lay well.

Remember, no amount of good management will get eggs from a bird which is from poor breeding: a well-bred bird cannot lay to the full extent of her inherited capabilities without good management. Good management includes:

Good Feeding

Foodshops and corn merchants supply meals specially compounded for chicks, growers and layers in mash and pellet form. These are balanced diets, scientifically made up to provide a complete ration. They must never be diluted with grain or scraps or their protein, carbohydrate, fats and mineral balance will be upset and the birds will lack something they need.

But they are expensive. If you want to economize by using grain or household waste, you must either buy a 'balancer' meal which has extra protein to balance the starchy nature of scraps and grain, or add your own protein. Two possible daily rations for a laying bird are:

1. 3 oz. household scraps, 3 oz. layers meal, ½ oz. cooked fish scraps.
2. 4 oz. household scraps, 3 oz. layers meal, ½ oz. white fish meal.

When using proper balancer meal, use scraps and balancer fifty-fifty. Remember that there is a limit to the amount of scraps you can use because of their bulky nature—to get the necessary nourishment the birds have to eat more bulk than they can manage. Balancer meal can also be used with grain fifty-fifty.

How you feed poultry is as important as what you feed them. You have the choice of pellets, wet mash, dry mash, grain. The birds prefer wet mash, grain, pellets in that order, but they also like variety. So feed them grain in the morning (or balancer pellets) and a wet balancer mash at night (or scraps dried off to a crumbly consistency with meal). At midday give them greens, but count these as extras, as they have little food value—merely tonic value.

With regard to quantities: never feed set daily rations but feed to appetite for the best results. The birds know best how much they need. But as a guide when you start, from 4 to 6 oz. daily per bird (depending on size of bird and the starchiness of the food) is the normal consumption.

Grit and Water

Grit is in two forms:

1. Insoluble grit—flint chips—assists the gizzard to grind the food as poultry have no teeth.
2. Soluble grit—oyster shell, limestone—provides the birds with the calcium they need to shell their eggs.

Provide both ad lib.

Water must be before the birds at all times, and must be kept clean and fresh. Withholding water will stop egg production quicker than withholding food. Remember an egg is 65 per cent. water!

Space and Fresh Air

Birds must have room to move about, sleep, rest and lay in comfort. Exercise is vital to healthy birds—give them 5 sq. ft. each if housed intensively, 4 sq. yds. each in a pen. Give each bird 9 in. of perch space, the same amount of trough space. Every three layers need one nest-box 15 in. square.

These are minimum figures. You can't give birds too much room: overcrowding will lead to ill-health, bullying, vices and lowered output. Fresh air is as essential as good food. In a correctly ventilated building fresh air should enter at floor level, circulate up through the house as it is warmed, and pass out when stale through the roof. Ideally the complete air content of a shed should change eight times an hour.

The smell of the shed first thing in the morning is your best practical guide to ventilation efficiency: airy houses smell surprisingly sweet while a warm, dirty smell indicates a need for more fresh air.

Housing

Nothing elaborate is required, but it must be weatherproof. The floor must keep dry, roofs be rainproof, windows and doors correctly fitting, nest-boxes draught free. Draughts are fatal to production and often to the poultry—seek them out with the aid of a lighted cigarette. If the smoke wafts gently upwards, the interior is correct; if it wafts to one side there is a draught somewhere. Ensure that there is plenty of light inside, particularly in winter.

Cleaning Out

Cleanliness is vital: a clean house will cut down the incidence of disease: regular litter changing prevents soiled eggs: routine sterilizing of troughs and drinkers destroys germs and keeps the contents more palatable—which, in turn, keeps appetites sharp.

Artificial Lighting

Normally poultry lay infrequently in winter and have a 'flush' of eggs in the spring. This is caused by the fact that spring is the normal laying time for birds in the natural state, and is the result of the increased amount of light as the days draw out.

If artificial lighting is provided in winter so that the birds get fourteen hours of combined daylight and artificial light, this is similar to spring lighting conditions in the amount of stimulation it gives the birds, and they lay accordingly. Thus a more even output of eggs is maintained throughout the whole year.

Use electric bulbs or paraffin pressure lamps—even an extra meal in the winter evening by the light of a hurricane lamp is beneficial.

Health

Birds of good breeding and well looked after are usually fit, but, of course, disease can occur. The most common ailment is the common cold (through weather changes, poor ventilation), which can be cured by pinking drinking water with potassium permanganate crystals and hanging tufts of cotton wool soaked in eucalyptus under the perches.

In the event of ill-health or mortality, always call in a vet or the N.A.A.S. Poultry Advisory Officer (this service is free) just in case the worst has happened.

Normal everyday precautions include a bowl of disinfectant outside the run for disinfecting boots, bucket bottoms and egg boxes. Don't encourage too many visitors, and be a stickler for hygiene.

Pests include:

Fleas and lice—especially in warmer weather, on the birds or in the nest litter. Paint the perches with nicotine sulphate. Red mite—under perches, in crevices. Spray with gammexane.

Routine

Poultry are very much creatures of habit, and the best results come from flocks where all daily chores are done to a set routine. Any sudden changes in feeding, environment, or daily routine will frighten the birds and lead to a drop in production. If changes must be made, make them gradually.

Costs

A typical set of costings for a six-bird flock for a year:

Cost of six birds to point-of-lay .	£6
Feeding during laying period, 11 months	9
Lighting, grit, litter, rent, etceteras .	1
Total annual expenses. . .	£16

In return for this outlay you might expect, not unreasonably, a hundred dozen eggs and six table carcasses at the end for sale or home consumption. If the carcasses fetch 10s. each, the eggs have cost £13, or 2s. 7d. a dozen. The average cost of large eggs in the shops for 1955 was 5s. a dozen.

Ducks

Good laying ducks produce fifty eggs a year more each than hens, and each will weigh ½ oz. more. They lay profitably well to three years of age; they are practically immune from diseases; they rarely go broody and they will make good use of land upon which other stock would not thrive.

Ducks find much food free for the gathering on marsh, bog, moor, river, lake and pond, beneath orchard trees and on meadow land. They cannot fly up and eat the fruit, and generally 3 ft. high wire netting is sufficient to enclose them.

Duck eggs are equally wholesome as hen eggs and make better cakes and custards. They should, however, be laid in clean nests, kept from direct sunrays, collected daily, cleaned (if necessary) on the same day and stored in a cool place (50–60° F.).

Housing is of a simple nature, merely to give protection from heavy winds, prolonged snow and to provide a laying place.

The best laying breed is the Khaki Campbell, a well-bred flock averaging 230 eggs a year.

The Aylesbury is the prime breed for table duckling, being a quick grower (6½ lb. in ten weeks), having white plumage, and producing an attractive carcass.

Ducks also make extremely attractive birds for showing at exhibitions, and the most popular are Khaki Campbell (layers), Indian Runner (layers), Aylesbury (table) and Muscovy (show). For showing they must be got from strains bred for shape, colour, weight and breed points.

Purely as ornamental pets, small ducks are popular in gardens, small orchards and on private grounds, but they must be regarded as purely for pleasurable viewing. Most are semi-wild and therefore only lay a few eggs in the spring. Excellent breeds are Mallard, Carolina, Widgeon, Pochard, Tufted and Pintail.

Ducks do not require swimming water (if it cannot be easily provided) but it is necessary to give a constant supply of clean water deep enough to allow of complete immersion of the head and eyes.

Geese

These poultry are grazers and are ideal for keeping grass (meadow or orchard or large lawn) short and neat at no expense. They must have grass, however, and they will live on it from May to September, but will need supplementary corn feed in bad weather and when grass is of poor quality or worn.

They are ideal pets, being quiet, docile, intelligent and easily managed. They do little damage to garden plants except vegetables and young trees (bark stripped). Three-feet high netting is ample, and the birds can be prevented from flying by clipping away the outside ten flight feathers of one wing (only).

They lay thirty to sixty eggs in the spring, which can be sold as fertile eggs or hatched into goslings. Geese live to thirty years. A mated pen is one gander to three to four geese. They need no housing but a secluded place to lay. Swimming water is desirable for mating purposes, but otherwise a 12 in. deep water trough will be sufficient.

The most attractive small breeds are Chinese (brown or white, 10 lb.) and the Roman (white, 11 lb.) but the popular breeds for table purposes are the Embden (white, 18 lb.), Toulouse (grey and white, 16 lb.) and the Brecon Buff (deep buff, 17 lb.). The common country goose is usually a badly bred Embden and Toulouse cross.

Laying starts about February and ends about May (on to June), and five eggs under an ordinary broody hen hatch out quite well (twenty-eight days). The goslings grow rapidly on chick pellets, but should be encouraged to graze on short grass from the start.

Turkeys

Turkeys are produced specifically for selling for Christmas, and given good results the profit can be from 20s. to 30s. per bird. They can be reared on clean grass range or, if none is available, intensively, i.e., confined to brooder and grower house.

At twenty weeks of age the average weight of turkeys of mixed sexes is 12 to 13 lb. and the average food consumption is 60 lb. The one-time heavy mortality at 'shooting the red' is now controlled by the use of the newer drugs.

The best breeds for profit are the American Mammoth Bronze (and the new variety the Broad-breasted Bronze) and the Norfolk Black; but other less popular sorts are the White, Buff and Blue (the latter more for exhibition purposes).

Egg production is around sixty eggs per bird in fourteen weeks of early spring and 12 lb. of food are required for each dozen eggs, the weight of each being 3 oz.

Turkeys need far more protection than ducks and geese, precise brooding to eight weeks, skilful growing on to twelve weeks, after which they can be allowed to sleep up trees in the open or in an airy open-fronted shed, provided it is at all times fox-proof.

One stag is mated to twelve hens and given fresh clean grass range. Turkeys and other poultry must not run together.

54. CHRISTIAN NAMES

The choice of a child's Christian name is ne of the important decisions parents are alled upon to make. Their choice may arn them thanks or reproaches from a son or aughter in the years to come. There are irls' names which will 'date' the child later n, and names which clash with the surname, ut as others combine pleasantly; names hich may prove a handicap as well as names hich are adaptable and suitable for all ccasions:

His father calls him William,
His mother calls him Will;
His sisters call him Willie,
But the boys all call him Bill.
